The canal between Worsley and St. Helena, in North England, is probably the longest and most remarkable canal of the kind in the world. It is sixteen miles long and is underground from one end to the other. Many years ago the managers of the Duke of Bridgewater's estate filled its old mines with water that they might transport the coal under ground instead of on the surface. Ordinary canal boats are used, the power being furnished by the men. The tunnel arch over the canal is provided with cross pieces, and the men propel the boats along as they lie on their backs on the loads of coal.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Catching Stray Dogs with Lariats.

Poundmaster Creech and his deputies were astir early this morning. The deputies were two colored men who evidently were adepts in the business of dog catching. The way they lassoed the curs was a sight worth witnessing. In most cities scoop nets are employed for this purpose, but the dog catchers of Butte are graduates of the plains, and instead of the net a piece of rope is employed. Standing several yards away, they deftly throw the coiled rope at a cur, and before the latter realizes his danger he is entangled in the lariat.—Butte Inter Mountain.

He Got a Place Near the Furnace.

He had been talking with St. Peter, and was sent down to the other gate, where he was warmly welcomed.

"Why are you here?" asked the fallen angel who stood guard.

"I don't know," he replied. "I never did any wrong. I never said an unkind thing about a person in my life."

Then the angel smiled.

"That's all right," he said, "come in. You will find the cage for the hypocrites at the end of the lower corridor next to the furnace."

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

☞ Sold by Druggists, price 75c per bottle.

In White and Gold.

White and gold effects were never more of a rage than at present. Quaint and curious pieces of furniture abound in all well-regulated drawing-rooms, no longer massively impressive, but Frenchy, graceful, and striking. Decorations follow this same hint and are much to the same purpose; pure dazzling white picked out with gilding is emphatically the combination of the day.

Asthma Sufferers

Who have in vain tried every other means of relief should try "Schiffmann's Asthma Cure." No waiting for results. Its action is immediate, direct and certain, as a single trial proves. Send to Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn., for a free trial package, but ask your druggist first.

Two Things about Catarrh in the Head

First—It is a constitutional disease. Prof. Gross, a leading scientist, says: "Catarrh is a constitutional disease which manifests itself by local symptoms." Dr. Dio Lewis says: "Catarrh is not a disease of the man's nose; it is a disease of the man." Therefore he says snuffs and other local applications are useless.

Second—It requires a constitutional remedy, like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which reaches and cures Catarrh by purifying the blood and building up the system, so as to throw off the disease. Thousands who formerly suffered from Catarrh agree that

To Stop a Trolley Car Instantly.

A Rochester man has devised a plan by which a trolley street car can be stopped almost instantaneously, or within a space of three feet, while the car is going at full speed. His device is operated by a lever in the motorman's cab. It is, generally speaking, a steel shoe, upon which the rear wheels of the car ride, the under side of which is corrugated so as to produce great friction upon the rails of the track. On the top of the shoe is an arrangement which, as soon as the wheel rises upon the shoe, clamps the outer rim of the wheel and at the same time grasps the inner edge of the rail. The simple weight of the car crowds down the shoe upon the rail and at the same time clamps together, as in a vice, the wheel and the rail; and all this by a single movement on the part of the motorman.

Plowed a Straight Furrow.

It is related of ex-Governor Joseph E. Brown that once when he was Judge of the Superior Court he had occasion to fine a man who years before was a neighbor to the Judge in the days of his struggle with poverty. The irate farmer came out of the court-room swearing like a trooper, and the first opportunity he had, said to the Judge: "Jedge, I don't think you orter fined me. I knowed ye in the days when you had to plow a little bull for a livin'." "Yes," replied the "Jedge," "but I always made it my business to keep the little bull in the row!"—Chattanooga News.

On One Condition.

John had been going to see Mary for some time, and was now getting down to business, as he explained. After telling her of his scanty income and the size of the lot—the very small lot—he wanted her to share, he asked: "Can you sew, dearest?" "A little," "And cook?" "Oh, yes." He was delighted. She would be a perfect treasure. Then he asked airily in the way of a final argument: "Can you keep house?" "I can," she said looking him over, "on certain conditions." "Name them, dearest." "I must have a house to keep." And another man's hopes were crushed.

New Fire Engine.

A St. Paul engineer has just completed a model of a new electric fire engine, a patent for which will shortly be obtained, that seem destined to work a revolution in fire extinguishing apparatus. It does away with the use of coal, and can be put in action with one horse, and one man less than the engines now in use. The engine weighs but 4,500 pounds, and is of 70 horse power. This makes the machine weigh 9,000 to 10,000 pounds less than the apparatus now in use while its efficiency is claimed to be much greater.

The Life Line.

It is evidently a veteran sailor who makes the suggestion that, as a vessel always goes ashore to leeward, and the life line shot from the shore must therefore be fired against the wind, and with all the difficulties which this implies, every vessel should carry a supply of rockets, which attached to deep-sea log line and signal-halliards, would connect them much more speedily with the shore.

Signaling at Night.

A fire balloon is a recent invention for signaling by night. The balloon is made of paper, is portable, and is inflated by burning spirits or even straw or wood. When ready to ascend a message string is appended. This is made of combustible beads strung at intervals on a piece of quick match. Different combinations of large and small beads are used to express the signals.

An Animal Worth Having.

"Tom, to look at that dog you'd think he didn't know nothin', but he's worth more'n a dollar a day to me durin' crab season. He'll just go an' lay in the water and purtend that he's dead, an' when he's covered with crabs wat come to feed on him he'll run ashore an' I kin fill my basket in less than no time. He's lost his tail an' one o' his ears, but he sticks ter bizness."—Life.

The First Free Town Library.

It is a curious fact that the first free town library in this country was not started in any literary center, but in the country village of Peterborough, N. H., when, in April, 1833, the town voted to purchase books for a town library, and has ever since then continued to support it. From the beginning it has been open Sundays, as well as week days.

WATERLOO.

Del Clutter, of Fort Wayne, was on our streets Tuesday.

Mrs. Juliet Dickinson is at Angola visiting her daughter and a cousin, who reside there.

Quite a crowd assembled at the railway station Monday to see the new liberty bell go through.

Mrs. Geo. Blair has been somewhat worse for the past week, but now seems to be improving.

Miss Nora Butler went to Auburn Tuesday for a short visit with his brother at the Glazier House.

Miss Katie Braun returned Tuesday of last week from Chicago, where she has spent over five months.

Charles Shoner and Miss Maude McBride will celebrate to-day, the 30th, by being married. Rev. U. S. A. Bridge will tie the knot.

Mrs. Frank Beidler spent last Sunday in Auburn with her husband. Mr. B. is not contented to be away from his home and now they talk of moving where his business keeps him.

Mr. Ogle, of Missouri, has been visiting his sister, Mrs. Samuel Edge, the past week; also a sister living in the country. He lived in Waterloo about twenty-five years ago, learning shoe making of Mr. Edge, for whom he worked He went from here to Ohio, where he will visit another brother before returning home.

The L. M. C. held their session Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. A. Faucett. The program consisted of Responses—subject, Thanksgiving; Literature of the National Period—leader, Mrs. Beidler; Side Lights on the World's Fair, Mrs. Winslow; Vocal Solo, Mrs Smith; Table Talk—subject, Midway Plaisance, led by Mrs. Winslow.

A few nights ago, A. Lower and John Franks, who live on adjoining lots in Uniontown, heard a noise out at their chicken houses. Both got up and went out to look what they could see. Franks concluded the noise must be at Lower's. Lower went far enough to see a man in Franks' chicken coop and then went back. The man also heard the noise and got out of the chicken house and skipped, minus his chicken.

Monday night Mrs. Armstrong, who lives in the southwest part of town, was awakened from her sleep by noises near the house. She opened the window blind and saw two men crossing the back end of the lot with a small delivery cart, or something like it, filled with coal, and were trying to put this over the fence, and it is supposed this caused the noise that awakened her. They heard her raise the blinds and hurried up their work, so that they spilled a part of the coal. But with the rest of it they went like a streak of lightning down the south street. She watched them till they got out of sight near Clairsville, the little addition on the hill southwest of town. She thinks it was soft coal, and taken from some that belongs to the Jackson road, and is kept near its tracks on the west side of town.

BUTLER.

T. C. Fralick is in the West looking for railroad employment.

Mrs. Emma Champion is very sick with a complication of complaints. Fears are felt for her recovery.

The Wabash Restaurant has been hauled off the railroad grounds and will perhaps be used as a dwelling.

Mother Platt, living four and a half miles north of Butler, is dangerously ill with but meager hopes of her recovery.

Harman Ames, a former well-known Butler man, is here negotiating for a small farm between here and Waterloo.

Mrs. Jane Strong, of Chicago, sister of T. C. Fralick, and their two nieces, of Garrett, visited with their Butler friends last Sunday.

Butler railroad men who work at Ashley come home occasionally and tell unfavorable stories of the situation in that much boomed town.

Mrs J. A. Campbell has been spending a week with her mother, near Angola, who is seriously ill. A brother is also seriously ill, but slightly improved at last accounts.

The Basket Factory is finally in operation, employing about fifteen hands. Its capacity will be increased until some forty hands will be employed. The product is meeting ready sale.

The Junior League of the M. E church gave a most creditable entertainment at the M. E. church a week ago. The collection reached about ten dollars. The efficiency of the work called forth words of praise from all present.

Jeff Boyle and A. Livergood have opened an auction and commission house in the old school building. Their first sale took place last Saturday and was well attended, and goods sold at a fair price, one horse selling for 25 cents.

We learn that the dwelling on the farm formerly owned by William Scoville, in Stafford township, now owned by a Mr. Repp, burned last Saturday night. Mr. Repp had $500 insurance on the house. William Hollinger lived in the house, but was away from home when the fire occurred and lost most of his goods, with no insurance. Cause of fire unknown.

The new and beautiful slate roofed brick school building at Franklin Center was destroyed by fire last Saturday. The teachers of the township had gathered to hold an institute, and had just called the meeting to order, about 11 a. m., when one of their number discovered that the house was on fire between the ceiling and the roof. They made a brave fight to save the building, but their efforts proved futile. They next directed their efforts towards saving the furniture, which they succeeded in removing almost entirely, even to doors, windows and bell, but some of it was saved in a somewhat damaged condition. The cause of the fire is unknown, but is almost sure to be the result of the faulty construction of chimneys and wood work that was near to them. The house was erected in 1892 at a cost of over seventeen hundred dollars, and was perhaps the finest district school building in the county. Mr. Whetsel, the township trustee, carried $1,300 insurance in J. A. Campbell's agency, which will be a material help towards replacing it.

ST JOE.

Reuben Body, brother of M. F. Body, has returned to his Michigan home.

Geo. W. Woodcox, wife and little daughter visited with friends in Antwerp Ohio, Sunday.

S. H. Bartlett, of Newville, was in town Saturday last. He had business in the justice's court.

C. C. Walters has so far recovered from his recent illness as to be on our streets again last week.

Mrs. J. M. Irvin, who has been in Kansas and Missouri for the past 18 months, returned to St. Joe Friday.

Dept. Prosecutor West, of Auburn, was in town on Wednesday of last week. The filing of some affidavits in liquor cases claimed his attention.

John Ainsworth, of Hicksville, and George Forder, of near Antwerp, were in town Tuesday looking after some stock that they had purchased of J. W. Dills.

Mahlon Baker has been appointed postmaster at St. Joe, and will take charge of the office Dec. 1, 1893. It has been only a few weeks ago that Mahlon was eating turnips to help sustain the physical part of him, and now we fear Uncle Jim will be compelled to come down to the same provender. But as a well wisher of Uncle Jim and his daughter, deputy, although straight back republicans, we have nothing but good words for them. They have always done their work well, have been obliging and accommodating and at all times ready to cater to the wants of the public.

The streets of our usually quiet town were lined with teams on Saturday, and our stores did a great deal more business than is an average. The "Big 4" alone sold over $300 worth of goods, and we are told by one of the proprietors that three-fourths of the amount was cash, or its equivalent. One bill of $39 was sold to parties near Leo; another of $41 went to Moorseville. Their sales last week averaged over $100 cash per day. The prophets who a little more than a year ago predicted failure, seem to be on the same line with some of the weather prophets, slightly off. Their store is filled with the best of goods from cellar to garret and it is no trouble for the boys to show their goods. When in town come in and see them and they will try and do you good. M. E. O. is a little on the timid order, but then he will not see you hurt. When guns are to be handled, call on Wid or Bert.

Last Tuesday afternoon the people of this quiet little town were thrown into a spasm of nervousness from which some of them have hardly recovered at this time The cause of all this was that Jerry K Gibford thought or fancied a wrong had been done him by A. E Swineford in regard to some ditching that had been done by Gibford for Swineford, to the amount of fifteen dollars. Swineford was sued in justice's court in August last, and confessed judgment in that amount, and paid into court the amount of judgment and costs. The same was repeatedly offered to Gibford by the justice, but he refused to take the money and sign the docket, which the justice insisted on, in order to protect himself. Last Tuesday evening Gibford saw Swineford enter the drugstore of Patterson Bros & Olds, and immediately followed him in and at the point of a revolver ordered Swineford to pay him. Swineford thinking to get away from him began edging away, Gibford following him At last Swineford was ordered to stop right where he was and not stir another step under penalty of death He was then ordered by Gibford to authorize W. C. Patterson, cashier of the St. Joe Bank, to pay the money to him (Gibford) Swineford gave the necessary orders and then Gibford transferred his business to the cashier, who, with the revolver pointed, as Wid. says, "right at my heart," handed over the fifteen dollars, taking Gibford's receipt therefor, the receipt being handed over to the justice on payment of the money into bank. Gibford was taken before Esquire Woodcox on affidavit filed by A. E. Swineford and was bound over to court in the sum of $300. (Gibford is in jail now)

CONCORD.

Elmer Davis broke his leg last Saturday.

Alice Draggoo was at St. Joe Thursday.

Cormie Gibford is in Indianapolis on a business trip.

Mrs. Leib Cline visited her cousin Mrs. R. Ervin Friday.

J. R Conrad, of St. Joe, was up on a business trip Friday.

Annie Smith returned home from visiting her grandma McBride, of Ashland, Ohio.

We forgot to tell last week that J. C. George was smiling over a little baby boy or No. 7.

The Wyatt's and Johnson's attended the funeral of their cousin Mrs. George May last Sunday. Mrs. M. died with that dread disease consumption. Her remains were interred in the Newville cemetery.

Mrs Melvin Davis died last Saturday morning with consumption. She leaves a little babe only a few weeks old. Mr. Davis is also very low with the same. His death is hourly expected, there will be five little orphan children to brave life's troubles alone.

Abe Sherck and wife were called to Paulding county, Ohio Tuesday to attend the funeral of the latter's cousin, who while visiting here last October was taken sick on the fair ground, which proved to be typhoid fever, but partially recovered, when erysipelas set in and resulted in death.

SUMMIT.

E. W Miner, of Hudson, was on our streets last Thursday.

Henry Lawson and family were guests of H. D. Snowberger last Sunday.

Miss Margaret Mortorff was the guest of Mrs Frank Forney over Sunday.

Mrs. Frank Grambling has been visiting her parents near Auburn the past week.

Mrs. Grant Dunlap, of Jackson, Mich., is here visiting Mr. D's mother, Mrs. Dunlap.

John Cotrell and family, of Hudson, were the guests of Frank Hilt and family last Sunday.

Mrs Susan McEntaffer, of Waterloo, visited her niece, Mrs. Viola Snowberger a few days last week.

Mrs. Addie Zinn, of Coldwater, Mich., is here visiting her stepmother, Mrs. Emeline Smth, at this writing.

VISITED BY AN EDITOR.

An Ohio Pencil Pusher Visits Auburn and DeKalb County and then Writes a Few Things.

The Pomeroy, Ohio, Democrat was struck by the late republican cyclone, and at once its local editor struck out for Indiana and DeKalb county, hoping, as he expressed it at the time, to "find at least one live democrat." "Three years without vacation," is the way he puts it, and adds something about the "tiresome results of the election." He and his wife started Nov. 13, and after the usual vexations of making changes on railways, got on the B. & O. He says:

Then began the night ride over the State. We ran to the north through Mount Vernon and Mansfield to Chicago Junction, where we turned westward and passed through Tiffin, Fostoria, North Baltimore, Deshler, Defiance and scores of smaller towns. Our train kept dropping farther and farther behind time, so that by the time we reached Auburn Junction, Ind., our destination, it was after 3 a. m., and the train was due at 1 a. m.

On the great plain and in the vicinity of Auburn, we spent four days in various manners, but principally in resting and visiting relatives.

As I always keep my eye on the educational advancement of a place, I singled out a country school, which was said to be an average one, and paid it a visit. If it were an average one, their rural schools are superior to those of Meigs county. The building is a model one for a country school, as to arrangement, sanitary conditions and apparatus, the latter being varied and complete.

On many occasions I have called attention to the school system of Indiana, which is in my opinion as nearly perfect as any in the United States, and forms quite a contrast to that of our much boasted system in Ohio, which is in reality the poorest in the country so far as I know.

While on the school question, I wish to again call attention to the complete triumph of the state school text books in Indiana. The books are now all published under state control and are just as good in every respect as those for which our people pay from one-third to one half more money. The success of this experiment, and especially when won in the face of the most bitter and relentless war of the school book monopolists, is extremely gratifying. If it does not lead to state text books universally, it will at least cut down the profits to something near a moderate profit instead of the high handed robbery of the past and present.

Land in northern Indiana is extremely fertile, and has every advantage as an agricultural region. It is worth from $25 to $40 per acre, without improvements, but there is very little of that character. Originally it was densely wooded, but the timber is pretty well culled out, and a fine tract of timber is, as with us, a rare sight.

Auburn, the county seat of DeKalb county, is in many respects a model town—with its wide streets lined with shade trees, electric lights, cleanliness, fine court house square and many other features of beauty and utility. It has some manufacturers, but lives principally by commerce, and has some as fine stores as any town of its size. Indeed some of the places of business far exceed those of any town of its size I was ever in.

Of course the newspaper offices were what interested me most. Three are published here. The COURIER, democratic, the Dispatch, republican and the Times, populist. I am modest enough to believe that they do not at all rank up with the papers of Meigs county.

* * *

Of course there are many peculiarities different from ours, but no one feature attracted my attention so much as the fuel. I didn't see a single open fire place—all stoves, and as coal is $7 per ton, the fuel is wood, which retails at from $1.25 to $1.50 per linear cord, ready for use. I saw a practical illustration of the old joke of taking cord wood on subscription while at one of the newspaper offices.

Fast Line to DesMoines.

The long list of cities in the west and northwest reached without change of cars via the North-Western Line, has been increased by the addition of DesMoines, the capital city of the great state of Iowa, and passengers for that point can now leave Chicago at a convenient hour in the evening, and arrive at DesMoines the following morning in time for breakfast. The train is fully up to the high standard always maintained by the North-Western Line, and is equipped with palace sleeping cars of the latest design, and reclining chair cars in which seats are furnished free of extra charge. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained upon application to any ticket agent or by addressing W. A Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago. A NARROW ESCAPE!

How it Happened.

The following remarkable event in a lady's life will interest the reader: "For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought every minute would be my last. There was a feeling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I couldn't sweep a room without sitting down and resting; but, thank God, by the help of New Heart Cure all that is past and I feel like another woman. Before using the New Heart Cure I had taken different so-called remedies and been treated by doctors without any benefit until I was both discouraged and disgusted. My husband bought me a bottle of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and am happy to say I never regretted it, as I now have a splendid appetite and sleep well. I weighed 125 pounds when I began taking the remedy, and now I weigh 130½. Its effect in my case has been truly marvelous. It far surpasses any other medicine I have ever taken or any benefit I ever received from physicians."—Mrs. Harry Starr, Pottsville, Pa., October 12, 1892.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles $5, express prepaid. This great discovery by an eminent specialist in heart disease, contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

The Keystone Watch Case Co. of Philadelphia,

the largest watch case manufacturing concern in the world, is now putting upon the Jas. Boss Filled and other cases made by it, a bow (ring) which cannot be twisted or pulled off the watch.

It is a sure protection against the pickpocket and the many accidents that befall watches fitted with the old-style bow, which is simply held in by friction and can be twisted off with the fingers. It is called the

Angola Republican—A tombstone in the Sowle settlement cemetery north of town bears the following strange inscription:

> "In James Lake I was drownded,
> The loss my parents deeply feel;
> But 'tis God who hath bereft them,
> He can all their sorrows heal."

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy: a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

Teacher—Do you understand the phrase, "rapid enunciation?"

Boy—Yes'm. It's the way folks says their prayers on cold nights.

Will You Do This?

We ask you to try Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup on these conditions: After using one bottle and you find it has not proved beneficial, return the same to the druggist you bought it of, and he will return the money paid; you cannot ask for more. This medicine is the best cough syrup in the market, and for La Grippe or Influenza it has no superior. Will you give this cough syrup a trial? You will certainly not regret it. Price .25, .50 and $1. By all druggists. 8

Caller—What's all that howling up stairs?

Mrs. Boardem—That faith cure doctor has the toothache.

Relief in Six Hours.

Distressing Kidney and Bladder diseases relieved in six hours by the New Great South American Kidney Cure. This new remedy is a great Surprise and delight to physicians on account of its exceeding promptness in relieving pain in the bladder, kidneys, back and every part of the urinary passages in male or female. It relieves retention of water and pain in passing it almost immediately. If you want quick relief and cure this is your remedy, Sold by Robbins & McCord, Druggists, Auburn, Ind.

Papa—Good gracious, what a point of interrogation you are! I'm sure I didn't ask such strings of questions when I was a boy.

Son—Don't you think if you had done so you would be able to answer some of mine?

Not so Strange.

So many people wonder and ask themselves why it is that among so many cough syrups, Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup is so far superior for coughs. This is not so strange. This medicine was a lifetime study of Dr. Marshall, and perfected by him while searching for his own health. The purest drugs are used in its manufacture, hence the results. The only way we can convince you of the true merit of this medicine is for you to give it a trial. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction. Price .25, .50 and $1. Sold by druggists and dealers. 7

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of Its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1874—CONCLUDED.

The year 1874 was marked by unusual activity in the churches. The German Methodist society erected a building on a lot west of John Whittington's, now Dr. Allen's place, and, although in numbers and not possessed of much means, they liberally contributed to meet the expense and enjoyed sitting in their own sanctuary to worship God in their own language, among their own people.

The beginning of this conference year, Rev. J. W. Welch took charge of the M. E. church at Auburn. The meeting house yet stood on one of the principal streets of the town It was poorly ventilated and in a neglected condition. Audiences were small and generally noisy and inattentive. The spiritual condition of the membership was at a low ebb. Petty jealousies and contentions had almost ruined the organization.

It was under these discouraging circumstances that Rev. Welch re-commenced his ministry. His first steps were to work up a spirit of sociability, church interest and progress. He went from house to house and by prayers and words of advice and encouragement succeeded in healing wounds and laying the foundation for exalted spiritual condition later enjoyed.

By his suggestion and counsel, the Ladies' Aid Society purchased two lots in a retired part of the town for $1,000, paying $100 down and engaged to pay $200 annually till the debt was discharged. He then circulated a subscription to raise money to move the church building to the lots purchased. This action was strenuously opposed, but he persevered and the church was moved, re-seated, painted, properly ventilated and remodeled generally.

As he had done in earlier years, Rev. Welch himself often assisted the workmen, and by his unflagging zeal, the building was finished and pronounced as good as new.

An excursion planned from Auburn to Jackson, Mich., brought in $860, which with a festival and subscriptions cleared the debt of repair and removal.

A pipe organ was bought for choir use and later a lecture room was planned, built and paid for. Church membership showed a great increase. Congregations were large, orderly and attentive and interest was notable on street and in business places.

The field of local journalism for some years exclusively occupied by the COURIER was in 1874, invaded and contested by a new aspirant for popular favor and political expression, and the republican party from this time on was to have an organ at the county seat.

R. H. Weamer, now editor of the Bristol Banner, this state, had come to Butler in the spring and began the publication of an independent paper known as "The Butler News." After a few months' experience, Mr. Weamer came out as a republican editor and, responding to overtures from Auburn, removed his office thither in November and continued his paper with change of name to "The DeKalb County Republican." It was thought that there was not room for another newspaper in Auburn and previous trials gave little encouragement, but Weamer persevered amidst difficulties that might well have daunted his courage and warranted his suspension. The many hardships and makeshifts experienced by the country publisher were all familiar to the founder of the paper, but, although it was often a hard job to procure sufficient funds to pay for the weekly package of paper sent C. O. D. and to meet the requirements of the office, the Republican never missed an issue and no employe ever failed to receive his pay.

In these exacting times, when local papers are so numerous and city dailies so cheap and replete with the world's doings, the publisher of a country newspaper must have genuine merit, tenacity of purpose and undeviating integrity to hope for lasting success. The verbose editorial, no longer read, gave place to bright, pithy comment on current topics of home interest and opened a new prospect for the enterprising writer.

The Republican, from name and subject matter, soon became a welcome weekly visitor at many a home and contributed in no slight degree to the good name and prosperity of Auburn. A marked peculiarity then existed and still exists in the fact that few persons, comparatively, are subscribers for other then their own political newspaper, preferring to learn local news through its columns only. Late as was the establishment of the Republican, it has shared the fate of earlier publications as regards its files, for careful inquiry has failed to find, even in possession of its publisher, more than an occasional copy of the paper in these first years, and save in the unconscious influence exerted at the time, it has passed into oblivion.

In 1875, Mr. Weamer received into equal partnership his nephew, Geo. W. Weamer, then a youth of but 17 years. In March of 1878, R. H. Weamer sold his remaining interest to C. P. Houser, returned to Butler and began the publication of a paper, democratic in sentiment. Soon disposing of this, he left the field of journalism, with which he had grown so familiar, and engaged in the hotel business. After a year or more experience in this line, he went to Bristol and returning to his chosen profession, started the paper now controlled by him.

The partnership of Houser & Weamer was of brief duration, since in May, Mr. Houser disposed of his interest to his partner, who, until March, 1881, continued to be sole proprietor when he sold to C. P. Houser and Joseph Rainier. George Weamer, "friendly by instinct," was of an open-hearted and frank nature and went about his work as a business man. He connected himself with the Zimmerman factory after leaving the printing office and contributed in no inconsiderable degree to its phenominal prosperity. His death in September, 1892, left a gap in business and social circles.

Mr. Houser purchased the share of his associate in November, 1881, and thus became the owner of the Republican. Continuing his work as agent for school furniture, he intrusted the conduct of the paper to Berry J. Lowry, whose intelligent management won favor with the community and to a marked extent, advanced its circulation.

Mr. Houser has led an active and versatile life. He was one of the first normal students from DeKalb county at Terre Haute, a leading and able teacher in the schools of this county and town, owner of the first bookstore in Auburn, an editor, a furniture agent and of late a nurseryman as well as active in a line in which he has few superiors, that of slating blackboards in the common and graded school houses of county and towns.

In June, 1884, Mr. Houser sold a one-third share in the Republican to Myron H. Hoisington, a graduate of Adrian college, Mich., and later the remaining two-thirds interest was bought by Prof. Wilbur Ferguson, one of the faculty of the college, a fine scholar and excellent writer.

Under the management of Mr. Hoisington as local editor, the Republican became an aggressive and outspoken news paper. Under the caption, "If you can't talk up your own town, don't talk," he left no opportunity unimproved to advertise the advantages Auburn offered for business and residence and his columns were ever open to the expressions upholding its best interests.

Resolute and conscientious as an editor, he fearlessly arraigned county officials for excessive constructive fees, and impressed the just principle that a public office is a public trust.

In March, 1885, the name of the paper was changed to "The Auburn Dispatch" and it became a semi-weekly. Finally, a sale was made of the publication to Edwin A. Nye, a newspaper broker who made it his business to buy up and sell county newspaper offices. Mr. Hoisington and a younger brother William, who had developed marked ability as a real estate agent in this county, removed to Kearney, Nebraska, where they continued thier profitable business with gratifying success.

Mr. Nye in 1889 sold the Dispatch to H. A. Stevens and Wallace B. Campbell, educated and talented young men, the former a student at West Point and a practical, experienced printer; the latter, a graduate of our state university, a principal of Paxton Schools and later, an attorney at Crawfordsville.

Under their management, which still continues, the Dispatch, which had become a weekly, has won general recognition as a sterling republican newspaper, its advertising space is exclusively reserved for home patrons, its columns are free from sensational and objectionable news and on its pages, there is seen nothing to offend good taste, nor detract from social purity.

The proprietors have a deep and personal interest in Auburn, and own stock in two of her manufactories. The Auburn Roaster and Baker factory was founded by Mr. Campbell, who is the secretary of the company.

The office was first located in the third story of the Ensley block, later it was removed to quarters over Tarney's meat market where the gilt republican eagle long spread his wings, and finally found permanent quarters on the second floor of the Odd Fellows' block, where it has ample space and convenient rooms.

The paper was a five column quarto till 1884, when Houser changed it to a six column quarto printed on the co-operative plan till July, 1884, when the policy of printing all eight pages at home was for a while pursued. It was enlarged to a seven column quarto Oct. 29, 1891.

A fine Potter press was purchased in September, 1883, and was the first cylinder press in the county. The power is supplied by a small Shipman oil engine and the job work machinery connected therewith insures prompt and excellent work. A new job press was added in the fall of 1892.

The circulation is 1,000 bona fide subscribers and the paper as an influence stands at the head of the republican press of the county, a worthy compeer of its neighbor, the COURIER. It has no official patronage and it needs none. It is amply self supporting and its managers are proud of its present and confident of its future.

(To be continued next week.)

Obituary.

Samantha Tryphena Benner, wife of John A. Sawyer, was born October 7, 1855, in Defiance county, Ohio, and departed this life Dec. 2, 1893, aged 38 years, 1 month and 25 days. She was united in marriage to John A. Sawyer Oct. 1, 1774. The moved to Auburn in the spring of 1875, where they lived with the exception of two years spent in Michigan. To this union were born three children; two daughters and one son. About three months ago her son George preceded her to the land of rest. She leaves a husband and daughters to mourn her departure. She united with the Baptist church of Auburn January 21, 1877, of which she was a member until her death, Mrs. Sawyer was a kind and excellent neighbor, a faithful, industrious and loving wife and mother, and held fast to the promises of her God until she closed her eyes in death. The funeral services were conducted from the Lutheran church December 5, at 2 p. m. Interment took place in Woodlawn cemetery, Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating.

Died.

Mrs Elizabeth Jones, at the residence of her son-in law, Geo. H. Picker, near Coffeyville, Kan., on the morning of December 1, 1893, aged 79 years, 8 months and 11 days. Mrs. Jones was an old resident of this county and well known to many of our people, especially in her old home neighborhood near Sedan.

Treatment for a Cold.

The season of colds being at hand, the instructions of an eminent physician may be found valuable: "When the first symtoms manifest themselves is the time for action, and this should consist of a hot mustard foot-bath before going to bed and a hot draught of milk. The covering of the body should be linen and wool, the former in the way of a sheet and the latter in a blanket. No attempt to get up an active sweating should be made. The foot-bath and the warm milk will give a sense of warmth and facilitate the natural excretion of material which should pass away by the skin, and any effort to aggravate this will be not only superfluous but harmful. The blanket should never be worn next to the night-robe, and should not be so thick as to confine the air next to the body. It is, indeed, often advisable to lighten the covering of the feet, and to preserve a certain amount of weight over the loins and to have the shoulders protected from the external surroundings in general. The last measure is not to be under-rated. A sensitive lung carries with its susceptibility to take to itself everthing that could possibly affect it to its detriment. Lung diseases belong to sensitive persons, and may or may not be the sequence of a cold. The majority of them can be traced to imprudence in dress and exposure."

The Great Through Car Line.

It is a well established fact that the North-Western Line (Chicago and North-Western R'y) in its equipment and train service, its general facilities for the accomodation of all classes of travel, and its methods of looking after the comfort and welfare of its patrons takes rank with the leading railways of the world.

Its through car lines extend from Chicago to St. Paul and Minneapolis, the "Twin Cities of the Northwest;" to Duluth, the Superiors, Ashland, Marquette, and the wonderful iron and copper regions of northern Wisconsin and Michigan; to Winona, Pierre, and the rich agricultural sections of Minnesota and the Dakotas; to Des Moines, Sioux City, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, the prosperous and growing cities of Iowa and Nebraska; to Deadwood, the Dakota Hot Springs, and the famous mining districts of the Black Hills; to Denver, Salt Lake and the health resorts of Colorado and Utah; to San Francisco, Cal.; Portland, Oregon, and Pacific Coast and Puget Sound points.

The perfectly equipped vestibuled trains of the North-Western Line convey the traveler comfortably, safely and quickly to nearly every part of the West and Northwest, and while one may travel surrounded by all the luxuries afforded by an equipment of magnificent sleeping cars, buffet, smoking and library cars, compartment sleeping cars, and superb dining cars, the comfort and convenience of passengers desiring to travel at small expense is promoted by the provision of accomodations for their use in Tourist Sleeping cars, Free Reclining Chair cars and commodious day coaches.

In a word, if you contemplate a trip to almost any portion of the West and Northwest, your ticket should read via the North-Western Line. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained of ticket agents in the United States and Canada, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North Western R'y, Chicago, Ill. 51

It May Do as Much for You.

Mr. Fred Miller, of Irving, Ill, writes that he had a severe kidney trouble for many years, with severe pains in his back, and also that his bladder was affected. He tried many so called kidney cures but without any good result. About a year ago he began the use of Electric Bitters and found relief at once. Electric Bitters is especially adapted to the cure of all kidney and liver troubles and often gives almost instant relief. One trial will prove our statement. Price only 50 cents for large bottles at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 6

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Two Women Murdered for Money—Lake Steamer Burned—The President Renominates Judge Hornblower—A Pennsylvania Mine Burning.

IN TIN CANS.

Dynamite Found in the Rooms of a Londoner.

London special: In connection with the arrest of a man at Hampstead, the other day, the Sheriff's officer searched a room at 27 Chancery lane, belonging to a man named Snyder, who is reported to have just arrived from the United States. When Snyder saw the officer coming he decamped, and they searched his room. Among the goods found were two tin cans inclosed in wooden boxes. They were taken to the Bow street police station and immersed in water. When examined by Government experts they were found to contain twenty-four pounds of dynamite in cakes. The police are investigating the matter, and seem to be under the impression that they have discovered a clue to a dynamite conspiracy.

Dr. Briggs Must Go.

The committee of conference on theological seminaries appointed by the last Presbyterian General Assembly, met in Pittsburgh, Pa., for the purpose of completing the report to be presented at the next assembly. Dr. W. C. Young of Danville, Ky., who is chairman of the committee says an effort will be made to formulate some plan by which the relations between the church and the seminaries will be more intimate and the control more effective without interfering with the rights of either. Rev. Dr. Bartlett of Washington, D. C., a member of the committee said whatever plan was devised must mean the expulsion of Dr. Briggs from Union Theological Seminary, or his return to the church at the church's terms.

Two Women Murdered.

A brutal double murder has been committed a mile north of St. Joe, Pa., Mrs. James Martin, aged 25, and her mother, Mrs. Christian Hesler, aged 60, were found lifeless by Mrs. Hesler's son, who had returned home. Mrs. Martin's skull was crushed and her throat was cut from ear to ear and her mother's head had been crushed in by a blow from a poker. The latter is still living, but will die. The murderer is Harper Whitmire, a son-in-law. He has not been apprehended, but officers are after him. The object of the terrible deed was robbery. Whitmire secured about $200 from a trunk.

Waylaid and Murdered.

Hazelhurst (Miss.) special: The most dastardly assassination in the annals of this country took place here recently in the killing of Hon. E. C. Williamson, Mayor of this town, by Kirby Miller, a notorious tough and hoodlum. Last spring the Mayor had Miller arrested for gambling. Miller has evidently harbored the purpose which he carried out by arming himself with a heavy bludgeon, and, waylaying Williamson, beat him to death. He was arrested.

Hornblower Renominated.

Judge Hornblower has been renominated for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. This move on the President's part had been expected. The opposition, however, is just as strong as ever. There will certainly be a sharp fight in committee and in the Senate over the nomination.

Lake Steamer Burned.

Mackinaw City (Mich.) special: The steamer, Waldo Avery, with 70,000 bushels of corn from Chicago to Buffalo, was totally destroyed by fire in the straits. She was beached at Gulpins' Point. The boat was owned by Hawgood & Avery, of Bay City, and valued at $80,000.

A Mine Burning.

Hazleton (Pa.) special: The Crystal Ridge mine is on fire. Eleven of the miners at work have been accounted for but four are said to be still in the mine. The breaker and adjoining buildings will probably be a total loss.

A Child Burned to Death.

At Langdon, Pa., fire swept away six dwellings. Four were occupied. Jacob Gunnly's 6-year-old child perished in the flames. In one of the houses Mrs. Joseph McGuire lost $1,500 in cash. The loss on the buildings is $30,000.

A Brutal Murder.

In the basement of Helmwood & Hansen's grocery at Omaha, Martin Anderson most brutally murdered a young woman, who has not yet been recognized, and killed himself.

A $20,000 Fire at Oscoda, Mich.

Fire destroyed the Opera House Block and two saloons adjoining, at Oscoda, Mich. A blinding snowstorm saved the rest of the business portion. Loss, $20,000; insurance, $10,000.

A Warship on the Rocks.

New York special: The United States warship Portsmouth went ashore in a heavy fog, but was pulled off at high tide by a tug. The damage is slight.

Ran the Blockade.

A dispatch to the London Exchange Telegraph Company from Rio Janeiro states that the insurgent Admiral, Mello, has finally succeeded in forcing a passage past the forts guarding the entrance of the Bay of Rio Janeiro and that his flagship, the Aquidaban, is now on high seas. The passage was not effected until some desperate fighting had been done. The entrance is guarded by Fort Sao Jao and a water battery on the strip of land extending northeast from the sugar loaf, Fort Lage, Fort Santa Cruz, and Fort Pico. When the Aquidaban was seen approaching the forts a heavy fire was directed against her. She replied briskly and the fight was kept up until she ran past the forts and was out of range. It was seen that some of the shots from the forts took effect and it is believed that the Aquidaban sustained considerable damage. It is conjectured at Rio Janeiro that she will effect repairs as rapidly as possible at sea and then cruise in the vicinity of Cape St. Roque to intercept the Nictheroy and America, the improvised warships now on their way from New York to reinforce President Pexioto.

HUDSON AND BROWN.

Two Nervy Operators Who Held Highwaymen at Bay.

The other night four villainous-looking tramps entered the telegraph tower at Little Beaver, Ohio, an isolated place on the Fort Wayne road, and demanded of Operator Hudson that he stop the first train either way. Hudson refused and the words were no sooner out of his mouth than the ruffians assaulted him, kicking and beating him until he was covered with blood. They then robbed him of $20, an overcoat, and other valuable articles. As they were leaving the office Hudson pluckily arose and, grabbing a revolver from a drawer, emptied the weapon at him. They returned the fire, but did not hit him. Next morning a trail of blood, leading from the office down the track, showed that he had wounded one of the robbers. The telegraph tower at Alliance Junction, three miles east of Alliance, was besieged by another gang of tramps at about the same time.

They attempted to batter in the door a dozen times during the night, but every time were met with bullets fired from a rifle in the hands of Clement Brown, the operator. The robbers kept up their attempts to sack the office until daybreak. Every operator along the line has turned his office into a small arsenal, prepared to give any one a warm reception.

ANXIOUS TO SETTLE.

Ex-Secretary Charles Foster Wants to Compromise with His Creditors.

Lima (Ohio) special: An effort is being made by ex-Gov. Foster to effect a settlement with his creditors at a certain per cent. of his indebtedness. If a satisfactory arrangement is not made the report of the expert accountants, who have been at work on the books, will be made public. The experts have concluded their labors and the report has been prepared. Every line of the report is full of interest. It is estimated that it will cover about five columns of an ordinary newspaper. The books of Foster, Wilkinson, Foster & Co., extending over a period of twenty years or more, have been gone over carefully. Every deal of the banking firm is known to the accountants. Some of them will be interesting reading. Thus far ex-Governor Foster has allowed the entire responsibility of the Fostoria failure to rest upon his shoulders. If the report is made public some startling revelations may be looked for.

"That ex-Governor Foster is straining every nerve to satisfy those who are suffering from the collapse of his bank, there is no doubt," said a man who is familiar with the cases. "He has made every personal sacrifice possible without yielding self-respect."

IN GREAT HASTE

Is the Corwin Being Prepared for a Sea Voyage.

San Francisco special: The United States revenue cutter Thomas Corwin is under special orders for a 2,500 mile trip. Her destination is Honolulu, without doubt, and she may be expected to leave any moment. Whether any person in diplomatic authority is coming here from Washington to go to the islands on the Corwin is not known. It is quite likely, however, that a special messenger, entrusted with secrets of state, will be the emissary who will occupy one of the state rooms already set apart in the after cabin. The greatest secrecy has been maintained since the special orders arrived. These turned the cutter over to the state department and placed her under waiting orders.

Lays Claim to Very Valuable Land.

Muncie (Ind.) special: A very elderly lady, giving the name of Mrs. A. Davidson, is registered at the New Southern Hotel here, where she has kept her presence a secret for several days. She registered from Portland, Oregon, and says she is here to claim a tract of about 1,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Daleville, ten miles west of Muncie. Many years ago a man named Edwardson owned a vast tract of land in that part of Delaware County, where he died. He had no immediate relatives except a daughter who had left home very unexpectedly. The old gentleman was known to have made a will, but it could never be found, and the daughter having been mourned as dead, the next generation of relatives took charge.

Mrs. Davidson, who is 71 years old, claims to possess the will and says she will prove her title to the fortune. She says she was offered $33,700 for the land and she has had ferrets at work on the case for several days. She furthermore has proof that she is an only niece to "Old Hickory" Andrew Jackson. The land is now very valuable, as the town of Daleville covers a part of it.

Destroyed by Earthquake.

The London Times publishes a dispatch from its correspondent at Teheran, who has just visited Kuchan, the town which was recently destroyed by an earthquake which caused terrible loss of life. The Times correspondent says that Kuchan is a heap of ruins and that not a house is standing. He adds that the scene is indiscribable. Bodies are still being recovered and the smell from the putrefaction is overpowering. The earthquake shocks, the correspondent telegraphs, were preceded by loud reports. In the hills, to the westward of the town, earthquake shocks continue to be felt. The adjacent villages escaped with little damage. There is talk of building a new town to the westward of Kuchan.

Another French Ministry Is Formed.

Paris special: The new French Cabinet Ministers have been presented to President Carnot. Their names are as follows:

Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs—M. Cassimir-Perier.
Minister of the Interior—M. Raynal.
Minister of Finance—M. Burdeau.
Minister of Education—M. Spuller.
Minister of Justice—M. Dubost.
Minister of Commerce—M. Marty.
Minister of War—General Mercier.
Minister of Works—M. Jonnart.
Minister of Husbandry—M. Viger.
Minister of the Colonies—M. Decasse.
Minister of Marine—Admiral Lefevre.

Thirteen Prisoners Tunnel Out.

At Muskogee, Ind. T., thirteen prisoners in the United States stockade tunneled out and made their escape. The work was done from a ditch covered with blankets. Among those who escaped were some of the hardest characters charged with crime, namely, Anthony Fields, incest; Rufus and Charles Wilson, C. Tunnell and Charles Owens, peddling whisky; William Sherman, John Murphy, Levi Blair, Frank Stephens and Milton Early, a negro preacher, charged with larceny and burning the jail recently. Frank Stephens was recaptured after a desperate resistance.

Natural Gas Explosion.

At Greensburg, Ind., Charles R. Porter, Secretary of the Zoller Natural Gas Company and a prominent business man, stepped into a regulator house belonging to the company on a visit of inspection. It being dark, he lighted a match and immediately a terrific explosion followed, badly wrecking the house and rendering Mr. Porter unconscious. He was dangerously burned about the hands and head, his heavy overcoat in a measure protecting his body from the blaze. Dazed and suffering terribly, he managed to crawl out on the frozen ground and was taken to his home by persons attracted to the scene by the noise of the explosion. He is in a serious condition, but it is thought he will recover.

Growth of the Deficit.

The Treasury debt statement issued Friday, shows a cash loss on November of about $6,500,000, leaving the balance on December 1 about $96,500,000. The expenditures for the month exceeded the receipts by $6,700,000, the latter only reaching $24,000,000. For the first five months of the present fiscal year the expenditures have exceeded the receipts by $34,000,000, or at the rate of nearly $7,000,000 a month, which, if kept up, will make the net deficit at the end of next June $80,000,000.

Rescued from the Rigging.

New York special: The ten persons who spent all night lashed in the rigging of the schooner Louise H. Randall, ashore at Great South Beach, were rescued by the wrecking steamer I. J. Merritt and taken to the Presbyterian Hospital in this city. The schooner, which is a giant four-master, sailed out of the Delaware Capes deep laden with coal from Philadelphia for Boston. She encountered the storm and the vessel struck, head on, high up on the outer bar of Great South Beach, opposite Bellport.

Anarchist Sentenced to Death.

Noel Maizon, the French anarchist, who waylaid and killed Mrs. Sophia Roes and brutally beat her husband, at Calamity, Pa., a few months ago, has been sentenced to death. At the trial it was alleged that the motive for the murder was that the Roes were in possession of a secret of Maizon's, who was to go to Canada and blow up the Government buildings. Maizon took the sentence coolly, not seeming to realize its awful import.

Haymarket Theater Burned.

The Haymarket Theater, corner Madison and Halstead streets, Chicago, was partly destroyed by fire. Loss, $75,000. The scenes about the burning building were only equalled by the great excitement attending the great fire of three years ago. Thousands gathered in the biting weather of the coldest day this year, to witness the destruction of the west side theater, the first to attract legitimate drama to that portion of the city.

Big Elevator Collapses.

A large warehouse belonging to Mayor R. B. Stinson and filled with grain collapsed at Anna, Ill., the foundation being defective. The building is a total wreck and the loss of grain is considerable. Fortunately there was no one in the building at the time of the accident.

Sold by the Sheriff.

The Pittsburgh Driving Park was sold at Sheriff' sale for $320,000. The sale was on a purchase mortgage of $20,000 held against the property on which a writ to sell was issued a few days ago.

Shot in a Quarrel.

At Vincennes, Ind., Henry Parks shot John Turner. The young men quarreled over a girl at a country spelling school. The thickness of Turner's clothing saved his life.

A Demon's Deed.

At Erie, Pa., crazed by morphine, Edward Cady murdered with a pistol two of his children and killed himself. His wife and a babe narrowly escaped

Make Them Work.

Governor Lewelling, of Kansas, has instructed the police officials of the State to make tramps and vagrants work on the streets and rock piles.

Resumed Work.

The Pullman repair shops at Wilmington, Del., has started up, giving employment to 300 additional men making 600 in all.

Matched to Wrestle.

Evan Lewis, "the strangler," and Charles Wittmer, Græco Roman champion, are matched to wrestle at Cincinnati, February 3.

Locomotive Works Burned.

The locomotive works at Rome, N Y., burned. Loss, $500,000; insurance $300,000.

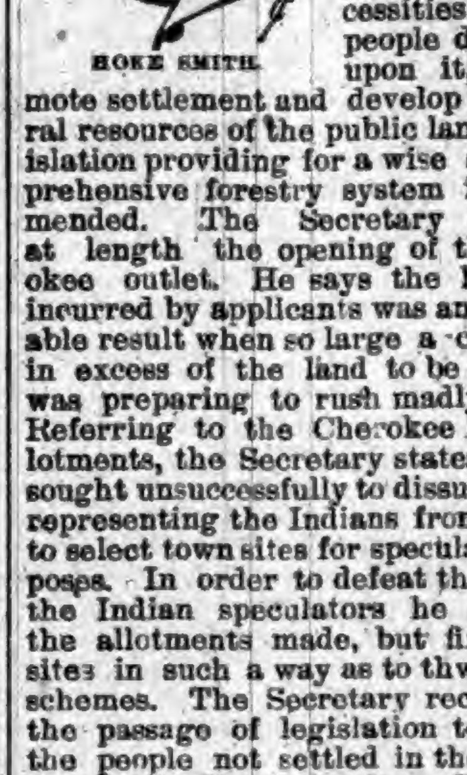
WORK OF HOKE SMITH

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

He Offers Defense for His Course in Pension Matters—Starvation Stalks Abroad in Michigan and Wisconsin—Comptroller of Currency Makes Report.

Interior Department Report.



HOKE SMITH.

Washington dispatch: Hoke Smith, Secretary of the Interior, in his annual report reviews the work of all branches of the department during the last year. He comments on the inadequacy of legislation thus far enacted to provide for the legitimate procurement of public timber to supply the actual necessities of the people dependent upon it, to promote settlement and develop the natural resources of the public lands. Legislation providing for a wise and comprehensive forestry system is recommended. The Secretary discusses at length the opening of the Cherokee outlet. He says the hardships incurred by applicants was an unavoidable result when so large a crowd, far in excess of the land to be obtained, was preparing to rush madly upon it. Referring to the Cherokee Indian allotments, the Secretary states that he sought unsuccessfully to dissuade those representing the Indians from seeking to select town sites for speculative purposes. In order to defeat the plans of the Indian speculators he approved the allotments made, but fixed town sites in such a way as to thwart their schemes. The Secretary recommends the passage of legislation to protect the people not settled in these towns from this discrimination. The work of the Indian Bureau shows that they are steadily advancing in civilization. Tribal wars and wars with the whites having ceased, they are increasing, and there are now more than 250,000.

The payment of Indian depredation claims is deemed a subject of grave consideration. Under the existing laws the appropriations intended for the support of these Indians will be consumed by the payment of these claims, and a second appropriation will be necessary to meet their needs, so that the payment of these claims will eventually devolve upon the Government. It is estimated that these claims will absorb many millions of dollars, and the policy of subjecting the Treasury to this strain is questioned. The recent troubles in the Choctaw Nation are touched upon at length. The Secretary urges the prompt passage of the bill now pending before Congress extending the jurisdiction of the United States in Indian Territory in order to include the right of removal of all cases, where local prejudice is shown without regard to citizenship.

Upon the subject of pensions the Secretary calls attention to the great amount saved to the Government by the stoppage of payment of pensions in Norfolk, Va., New Mexico, and Iowa. Where it was thought that the pensions could not be sustained, and another medical examination was necessary, payment of the pensions was suspended pending the investigation. "This," he says, "was done by the Commissioner of Pensions in pursuance of the uniform practice of the bureau, existing almost from its early organization. It was found that many thus suspended were able to supply the proof when notice to that effect was given. Payment to these was at once resumed."

Referring to the work of the Census Office, the Secretary states: "I now feel all confidence that every effort is being conscientiously made to bring the census to a close and to render it as useful as possible when finished." It is intimated that the appropriation now available will be sufficient to meet the expenses up to Feb. 1, but that additional appropriations to the amount of $500,000 will be necessary to continue the work from that time. In closing the report the Secretary stated that in the estimate of expenditures for the department a great majority of the proposed improvements were rejected, only those actually necessary for the conduct of public business being adopted.

ECKELS MAKES REPORT.

What the Comptroller of the Currency Says to Congress.

The annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency, which was submitted to Congress more briefly than the report usually made by that officer, differs from former reports in that no tables appear in the body of the taxt. It shows 3,796 national banks to have been in operation at the close of the report year, with a capital stock of $695,558,120, represented by 7,450,000 shares held by 300,000 shareholders. At the last report of condition the total resources of the banks then in operation were $3,109,563,284.36. The total amount of circulation was Oct. 31, $209,311,993, a net increase during the year of $36,886,972. During the year 119 banks were organized in thirty-two States and Territories, with a capital stock of $11,230,000, distributed as follows: Forty-four, with a capital stock of $5,135,000, in the eastern States; forty-one, with a capital stock of $2,340,000, west of the Mississippi River, and thirty-four, with a capital stock of $3,775,000, in the central and southern States.

Within the same period 158 banks suspended, with a capital stock of $30,300,000. Of this number eighty-six, with a capital stock of $18,205,000, resumed, and sixty-five passed into the hands of receivers, with a capital stock of $10,885,000. At the close of the year seven remained in the charge of examiners pending resumption. The aggregate liabilities Oct. 3, 1893, the date of the last report of condition, compared with those of Sept. 30, 1892, were $400,531,613 less. The shrinkage in liabilities is accounted for by a decrease between the dates mentioned in the following items: Capital stock, $8,032,677; individual deposits, $314,298,658; and bank and bankers' deposits, $181,338,125. The decrease in resources is as follows: Loans and discounts, $327,406,926; stocks, etc., $5,965,564, and due from banks and bankers, $132,054,654. Cash of all kinds increased $36,968,606, including $8,410,815 in gold. United States bonds held for all purposes increased $40,601,250.

The Comptroller reasons from the changes in these conditions that the business depression of recent months was occasioned by the action of depositors withdrawing so much money from the banks, which caused a sudden contraction in the volume of money needed or employed for business wants. The banks, being compelled to call in loans and discounts to meet the demands of depositors, were prevented making new loans, and it was rendered hazardous on the part of the banks to grant renewals of credit or extensions.

The suspension of national banks during the year is discussed, and also that of resumption. Upon the question of resumption the Comptroller says: "With a full knowledge of the general solvency of the institutions and the causes which brought about their suspension, the policy was inaugurated of giving all banks which under ordinary circumstances would not have closed, and whose management had been honest, an opportunity to resume business. This policy was one which seemed to commend itself to the Comptroller as proper to pursue under the circumstances, and it is believed the results have justified the experiment of its adoption.

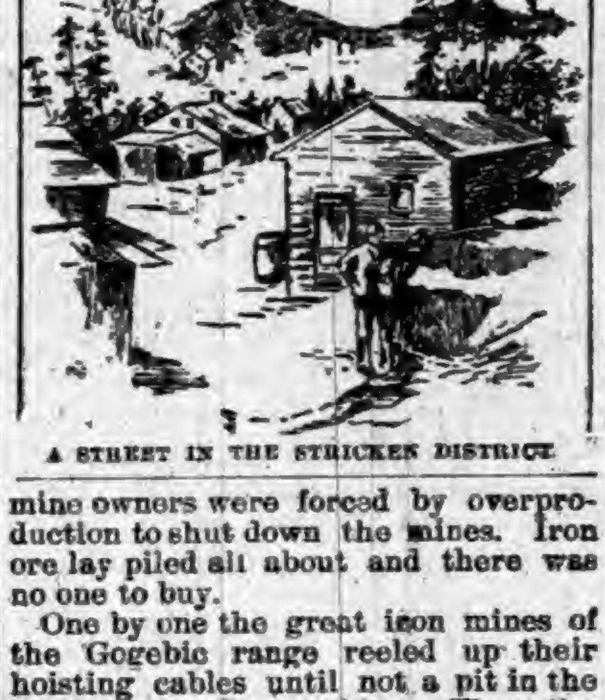
"In view of the fact that there is now a very great abundance of unemployed currency in the country, as is shown by the daily money returns from the commercial centers, it would seem that whatever needs appeared some months since for enlarging to any marked extent the circulating medium have now ceased to exist, and therefore Congress is afforded an opportunity of giving to the whole subject that careful research and investigation that its importance in all of its bearings demand."

WISCONSIN MINERS STARVING.

Without Work, Money or Food in a Wild Mountain Region.

It was a cheerless Thanksgiving Day on the great Gogebic range of iron miners, where 5,000 able-bodied miners—Finns, Cornishmen, Austrians, Italians, Poles and Irishmen—with 15,000 women and children dependent upon them are out of work. There is no money, there is little food and less clothing, and until the people of the State responded to Gov. Peck's appeal for aid, these 20,000 miserable folks were suffering all the horrors of starvation.

For many years, until last spring, the great iron mines of this region have been working full blast. Those were days of prosperity and the miners were flush with money. This spring the mine owners were forced by overproduction to shut down the mines. Iron ore lay piled all about and there was no one to buy.



A STREET IN THE STRICKEN DISTRICT.

One by one the great iron mines of the Gogebic range reeled up their hoisting cables until not a pit in the whole range was working. Then the miners did not know which way to turn. Not one of them had a penny saved for such a day. Some of them had cut wood from neighboring forests and others had raised potatoes to eat during the winter. But the majority of these hardy men were left destitute when the mine superintendents announced that the pits would not be worked for an indefinite period.

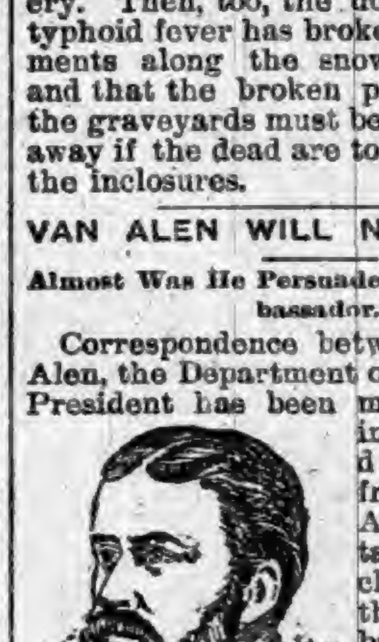
It is no exaggeration to state that 1,000 children on the Gogebic range are to-day without food, clothing or shoes except for the limited supply forwarded by charitable people elsewhere. And these poor creatures do not belong to miners alone. For years and years hundreds of men have been chopping wood in the black forests to the north and south for the big furnaces at Hurley, Ironwood, Bessemer, Saxon and Ashland. When the mines shut down these woodmen were ordered to stop work, and thus 500 or more men were forced to return to their homes and await the time when the whistles and bells of the shafts should announce the opening of the pits. It has been six months since the bowels of the Gogebic range were whacked by the picks of the men who now stand round in the snow and biting winds and wonder whether it's to be beets or potatoes that the good wife is to cook at noon. The little children running about the bare floors cannot answer the question, for the cold wind from the broken windows drives them into corners and makes them talk about the stockings they should be wearing and the shoes father can not buy.

Relief committees at Ironwood, Hurley, Bessemer and Ashland are doing all in their power to relieve the distress, but they are scarcely able to take care of so great a charge. It is not probable that the mines on the range will be opened this winter. This means that 20,000 people must be taken care of if the graveyards in that storm-swept section of Wisconsin and Michigan are not to be crossed and recrossed by the black hearses of the village livery. Then, too, the doctors say that typhoid fever has broken out in settlements along the snow-capped range and that the broken picket fences of the graveyards must be drawn farther away if the dead are to be kept within the inclosures.

VAN ALEN WILL NOT ACCEPT.

Almost Was He Persuaded to Be an Ambassador.

Correspondence between J. J. Van Alen, the Department of State, and the President has been made public. It includes a letter dated Nov. 20 from Mr. Van Allen to Secretary Gresham declining to accept the Italian embassy, one from Mr. Cleveland to Mr. Van Alen urging his acceptance, and a reply to the President's letter, dated Nov. 25, persisting in the declination. The almost embassador denies the charge that he furnished $50,000 to the Democratic campaign fund—he says the sum was smaller—or that for such a reason his name had been sent to the Senate. In his letter to Van Alen urging him to reconsider his refusal to accept the embassadorship, Mr. Cleveland says:



J. J. VAN ALEN.

> I did not select you for nomination to the Italian mission without satisfying myself of your entire fitness for the place. I am now better convinced of your fitness than ever. You know, and I know, that all the malignant criticism that has been indulged in regarding the appointment has no justification, and that the decent people who have doubted its propriety have been misled, or have missed the actual considerations upon which it rests. We should not yield to the noise and clamor which have arisen from those conditions. My personal preferences should enter very slightly into your final determination, but so far as I have such preference it is emphatically that you accept the honorable office conferred upon you and vindicate by the discharge of its duties the wisdom and propriety of your selection.

MRS. EMMA VAN PATTON was arrested at Salt Lake, Utah, on a warrant charging her with the murder of her uncle, Soren Neilson, an aged money lender, by poisoning him Oct. 18, at Provo. The dead man kept a large sum of money about the house, but only $50 was found after his death.

ABOUT $200 worth of meat was stolen from Kamrath & Hirschinger's market at Baraboo, Wis.

Terrible Explosion at Elwood.

At Ellwood occurred the most terrific gas explosion ever known in that city. The scene of the explosion was at the plant of the Electric Light and Streetcar Power Company. The gas had accumulated under the floor, and without a moment's warning an explosion took place, wrecking the building and hurling the sections in all directions. One portion of the structure crashed through the street car barn, situated alongside the power house, and also partially demolished the office of the Citizens' Gas Company near by. The ponderous engine and dynamos were lifted from the floor and hurled across the room, every inch of floor being torn from the sleepers and hurled into the air, together with the sides and roof, which then fell among the dismantled machinery, burying four men in the ruins. All escaped with their lives. The injured are:

O. B. Frazier, face and hands burned and badly bruised.

Lewis Shively, face and hands cut with flying debris.

David Thompkins, injured about head and body.

Joseph McMahan, several gashes in head, face, hands and body.

All were in the building at the time of the explosion except Shively, who had only the moment before stepped outside. Miss Minnie Mitchell and Bert Carpenter, who were employed at the Citizens' Gas Company's office, had a narrow escape from the flying slate and timbers. McMahan was blown clear out of the wreck over into an alley, and when found was unconscious. Physicians pronounce the men seriously but not fatally hurt.

Minor State Items.

MUNCIE is to have another company of State militia.

A WATER tank in the Big Four yards at Muncie was demolished by a wreck.

MRS. JOHN KING of Cannelton, was perhaps fatally burned, her dress taking fire at a grate.

DICK GOODMAN, leader of a notorious gang and who was shot while attempting to rob a store, is dying at his home at Dundee.

TWO TENEMENT houses owned by Nicholas Shumaker in Muncie were destroyed by fire caused by a natural gas explosion.

JAMES YOST, a Nickel Plate brakeman, was so badly crushed while coupling cars at Knox, that he died on the train taking him to Fort Wayne.

THE 2-year-old daughter of Albert Preston, a farmer living near Petersburg, was standing before a fireplace and her clothing caught on fire. The child's head and abdomen were badly burned. She will not recover.

HENRY BLESSING, a farmer living north of Fort Wayne, awoke and found his residence in flames. He had just time to throw his wife and children out of a window and leap after them as the floor fell in. Loss, $2,500; no insurance.

REPRESENTATIVES of the Chicago Rock Face Stone Company are in Muncie negotiating for the location of a plant in that city for the manufacture of their patent product. The proposed plant will employ about 300 people, and it is likely to be located in Muncie.

WILLIAM COLE, an employe at the rolling mill at Brazil, met accidental death while piling scrap iron. He was standing on a small car, and in attempting to remove a piece of heavy iron above his head, his feet slipped and he fell backwards, striking his head against a car wheel, knocking out his brains.

THE body of Jesse F. Cole, a young farmer, aged 32, was found in the woods near Surprise. Mr. Cole left home to go to the woods to cut down an elm tree. His failure to return home caused a search to be made, and he was found dead, having been struck by the butt end of the tree as it fell. He leaves a wife and two children.

WHILE their mother was absent from their home, ten miles south of Veedersburg, two little girls, the daughters of Lewis Davis, while curling their hair, accidentally overturned a lamp, the oil spreading over their clothing and igniting. They ran out into the yard, when their mother, attracted by their screams, rushed to them, but was helpless to check the flames. Their clothing was burned off and the charred flesh dropped from their bodies. One of them died ere they extinguished the flames and the other lived only a short time. Mrs. Davis was so badly burned that she will die.

A TERRIBLE accident occured at Knightstown, resulting in the instant death of Mr. Reuben Peden, one of the prominent men of Henry County. Just as the west-bound limited on the Panhandle was passing the depot Mr. Peden attempted to cross the track and was stuck by the engine, which hurled him nearly seventy feet against a watchman's stand. Nearly every bone in his body was broken, his head being crushed to pieces. Death was, of course, instantaneous. Mr. Peden was sixty-nine years of age, a native of Pennsylvania, a man of considerable wealth, being a member of the firm of Wilkinson & Peden, one of the largest grain-dealing firms in eastern Indiana. In Masonic circles Mr. Peden ranked high, having served as grand commander of the Knights Templars and grand high priest of the chapter of the State. He also served as commander of Knightstown Commandery for fifteen years and has filled every office in the gift of his home lodge, chapter, council and commandery.

TWO BURGLARS ransacked John Grondahl's house, near Chesterton, and carried away a lot of jewelry and valuable notes. They were captured at Valparaiso.

PATENTS have been granted to Indiana inventors as follows: Samuel M. Brundage, Indianapolis, deflector for ironing machines; Theodore Decker, Charlottesville, assigner of one-half to T. Roberts, Arlington, harness; John A. Grove, Bluffton, wire fence; George I. Harwell, Fort Wayne, folding chair; John I. Hoke, South Bend, harrow; Henry Stacey, assigner of one-half to M. H. Cain, Indianapolis, oil burner.

JOHN MACKLAND, a young man about twenty-two years old, who has been considered unbalanced in his mind attempted to shoot himself at his home, eight miles south of Salem. His brother William and mother tried to prevent him, when he turned the pistol in his brother's face and fired, the shot striking him near the nose on the right cheek. William ran out of the house, and the crank placed the revolver to his own head and fired, the ball flattening out against the skull, but not seriously wounding him. The brother is quite seriously hurt. A lunacy commission declared the man of unsound mind, and he will be sent to the asylum.

The Story of a Woman's Atonement, by Charlotte M. Braeme.

CHAPTER XIX.

"I see how it is," said Capt. Flemyng, good-temperedly, as they entered the exhibition; "the birds of the air must advertise the intelligence when you go abroad. See, there are Lord Falcon and unless I mistake, the Duke of Alton before Millais' picture."

The expression of annoyance on her beautiful face could not be mistaken. It made Paul Flemyng's heart beat with happiness; it led him to the very brink of the error he committed.

"You do not care to see him," he said, hurriedly.

"No," was the frank reply. "I had set my heart on seeing the pictures with you and Ethel."

"Then you shall do so. We will wait until they have passed. You shall not be teased, Lady Charnleigh."

He contrived so that she was quite unseen by either of the two gentlemen. The Countess smiled her thanks.

"You soldiers are all quick of resource," she said. "I do not want to hear again how beautiful I am, or how charming—and his grace tells me nothing else."

"Do you not like flattery?" he asked.

"Sometimes," was the candid reply, "and from some people; but I am not in the humor for it now."

"I have often been afraid that I spoke too abruptly," he said.

She looked at him kindly.

"No words of yours could ever vex me—they are meant in kindness. Besides, you know, I do not class you with the world in general."

They were standing then before a picture that all the world knows and admires—the Huguenot lovers—the simple story of which is told so plainly on the canvas. Round the arm of a Protestant lover, in the dread time of the great massacre, the Catholic girl whom he loves is trying to fasten a white scarf, the Catholic emblem, which would take him safely through the streets, but he refuses to purchase his safety by false appearances.

They stood before it for some minutes wrapped in admiration.

"How grand!" said Leonie. "After all, nothing moves one so greatly as true nobility of character, true heroism."

"Would you have sought to save your lover in such a fashion?" asked Captain Flemyng, gently.

"Yes, I should have lost sight of the means in the end; I would have saved him at any cost."

"Except that of honor," he added.

"Ah, honor is the idol you soldiers worship; I should have remembered his safety and my love first, and then honor if convenient. Do not look shocked, Captain Flemyng; there is not one woman in a thousand who would not do the same."

"I would not," said the clear, sweet voice of Ethel Dacre; "no matter how deeply I loved a man, I would rather—oh, far rather—see him dead at my feet than know him bankrupt in honor."

Paul Flemyng looked at the pure, earnest face.

"I believe you," he said; "you are the one woman in a thousand whom Lady Charnleigh speaks of."

Her face flushed, her heart beat faster at the words; earth held nothing for her so sweet as praise from his lips.

"You are singularly alike in your ideas," said Lady Charnleigh. "Pray tell me, Sir Bayard—supposing that you loved a woman very dearly, more dearly than life, and that you found had failed in this honor you prize so highly, what would you do then?"

"Cease to love her. You may think me severe, Lady Charnleigh, but I could no more love a person whom I knew to have committed a dishonorable action than I could——"

"Commit one yourself," she interposed, promptly, seeing that he paused for a word.

"You are right," he said. "Honor is the breath of life; the man or woman who possesses it, possesses something half divine; without it, they are barely human."

"What an earnest discussion," interrupted Sir Bertram Gordon, who had joined them unperceived. "Ah, Lady Charnleigh, you are looking at Millais' picture."

"And we have also been discussing it," she supplemented, turning her head lest the bright flush on her face might be seen. "Sir Bertram, are you as inexorable as Captain Flemyng? Could you ever forgive a dishonorable action in the person you loved?"

He was silent for some minutes, and then the grand Saxon head was proudly raised.

"I cannot imagine myself loving any person capable of such a thing," he said. "Love has instincts that never err."

"But if you are deceived—if you believed the lady everything good and noble, and you found that she had been guilty of one false action—could you forgive it?"

"I cannot say. I should take the circumstances or the temptation into consideration." Suddenly his eyes fell upon a beautiful picture near them.

"Look, Lady Charnleigh," he said; "there is the answer to your question. That is how I should forgive."

They followed the direction of his hand. The picture was exquisite beyond words. It represented "The Pardon of Queen Guinevere."

In the background rose the gray walls of the convent, ivy clinging round the stone crosses; passion flowers and roses climbing to the low-arched windows. King Arthur stood before the gate, tall and stately, with a look of pity, half-divine, on his kingly face. She, the beautiful, beloved, guilty wife, lay at his feet, her white hands clasping them; her lovely face was lowered to them, and her golden hair fell like a veil over the imperial figure so lowly bent.

"To see thee lying there,
Thy golden head—my pride in happier summers—
At my feet," murmured Ethel Dacre. "How could she—oh, how could she betray him?"

"That is how I should forgive, Lady Charnleigh."

The gravity of his words and the beauty of the picture had startled the young countess. Her face was pale; she tried to speak gayly as she had before.

"After you had forgiven, would you hide away as the king did?"

He looked at her before he replied.

"Take a lily-leaf in your hand, Lady Charnleigh, and stain it: Can paint cover the mark or restore its beauty? Brush the bloom from the downy peach; can anything give it back? Crush the perfume from the scattered leaves of a rose, can anything make the flower whole and complete?"

"No," she replied.

"So faith, once destroyed, can never be made whole. So love, once rudely awakened, can never sleep again. So trust, once betrayed, can never be wholly restored."

"I think," she said, impetuonly, "I would rather have Captain Flemyng's refusal to pardon than your forgiveness, Sir Bertram."

"Why," he asked, simply.

"He would make me proud and angry. You would make me so angry, if I had done anything wrong, that I should break my heart over it."

In after years, those words returned to her, and she knew they had been truthfully spoken.

Sir Bertram was the first to recover himself.

"Our discussion has made us all very serious. Lady Charnleigh, you carry sunshine with you wherever you go—why this eclipse?"

"You have frightened me," she replied, in a low voice. And, looking at her, Sir Bertram saw the beautiful eyes dim with tears.

For once in his life he was nearly giving way to a mad impulse. He wished to take her in his arms and kiss the tears away. His great heart yearned over her. He loved her so dearly and so well that the very force of his own love frightened him.

"I am sorry," he said. "I have an earnest way of both speaking and thinking."

"Earnestness is the very salt of life," put in Captain Flemyng; and Ethel's sweet eyes looked her approval of the words.

Later on in the evening of the same day, when Lady Charleigh's noble drawing-room was half filled with guests, these four found themselves together again.

"Lady Fanshawe says we have had enough of London for this season," the brilliant young mistress was saying; "she wishes to return to Crown Leighton."

"London will lose its brightest star," said Captain Flemyng.

She always smiled at his compliments, but they never brought a burning flush to her face as one word from Sir Bertram did.

"The 'star,' as you please to call me, Captain Flemyng, has made up her mind what to do, if possible. She will take her world to Crown Leighton, and shine on it there. Ethel," she continued, earnestly, "you must accompany me to Crown Leighton. I refuse to be parted from you. The General has his hands full of business; he does not want you. I do. Come and stay with me for three months. Help me to persuade her, Captain Flemyng."

"She needs no persuasion," he returned. "She is willing."

"You will be at Weildon," continued Lady Charnleigh—"only a few miles away. You will come over very often. I want to have charades, private theatricals, and everything that is gay, bright, and pleasant."

"You make me very happy, Lady Charnleigh," said the young soldier.

"What have I done," said Sir Bertram, "that I should be banished from paradise?"

"I do not know that you are banished?" replied Lady Charnleigh, with a charming smile.

"You have not honored me with an invitation, Lady Charnleigh; you do not know how eagerly I shall respond."

"I will give you one to Weildon," said Captain Flemyng. "We shall have some capital shooting there in September. I am leaving London next week—come with me."

Lady Charnleigh heard the words with a beating heart.

"Verily," she said to herself, "my jest is a true one I am taking my world with me."

CHAPTER XX.

It was late one June evening when the young Countess, with her brilliant train, again took possession of Crown Leighton.

It was the first time for many years that Crown Leighton had been filled with guests. All the state rooms were thrown open; the magnificent apartments, so long closed, were once more filled with bright faces and cheerful voices; once more the grand old mansion re-echoed with the voice of mirth and song.

The guest rooms, those beautiful apartments set aside for the accommodation of visitors, were filled; it was something like olden times to see gentlemen lounging about the terraces, ladies flitting through the superb apartments and lingering in the vast conservatories, and servants hurrying to and fro in all the activity and bustle of a large household.

"Thank heaven," said the housekeeper, piously, "that I have lived to see this day. My young lady will not complain of quiet again."

Lady Charnleigh had not forgotten Crown Leighton during her triumphant season in London; she had sent down marvels in the way of furniture and works of art. "After all," she had said to Lady Fanshawe, "I am one of many in London; at Crown Leighton I am queen."

She might be pardoned if, finding herself uncontrolled mistress of all this splendor, she was somewhat led astray by vanity and love of power. She was so young, and it was all so novel to her; she had but to express half a wish, and people hastened to gratify it. Wherever she went, servants and dependents bowed low to her; she heard no voice save that of praise and homage. Mr. Clements declared that had she been born to a throne she could not have conducted herself with greater grace and majesty. Mr. Dunscombe said that, with all her beauty, grace and accomplishments, she had a wonderfully clear head for business, she understood everything most readily. "She has what is a rare quality among beautiful women—she has common sense," he observed once in speaking of her; "and that goes further than any amount of genius."

So Leonie, Lady Charnleigh, lived in an atmosphere of praise. She soon made herself not only popular but be loved in the neighborhood. She gave parties that every one enjoyed; she threw open her mansion for the entertainment of half the county; she spared neither money, nor labor, nor trouble to make every one around her happy.

"You are a perfect hostess," said Lady Fanshawe to her, one evening after a dancing party; "I cannot tell where you have learned the art of entertaining people, you who in the past days saw so little of society."

"Politeness and what you call the gift of making people happy come naturally from a light and happy heart. How can I, who never sigh, fail to long to see other faces bright? I, who have no care, no trouble, cannot help wishing every one else to be glad and joyous."

She spoke with a smile so beautiful, with her face so radiant that Lady Fanshawe was somewhat struck with fear.

"Will she always be so happy," she thought, "in this world where pain outweighs pleasure? Can it possibly last?"

CHAPTER XXI.

Lady Charnleigh was not twenty; she was as beautiful as a vision and mistress of a large fortune and magnificent estate. She had nothing to do but frame a wish, and it was gratified. When she rose in the morning she would say to herself that she would enjoy a certain pleasure before night, and it was hers to enjoy. She imagined a hundred wants for the sake of gratifying them. Yet her pleasure in her wealth was not wholly selfish. She gloried in relieving distress; to see a pale face brighten and dim eyes shine with happiness was to her a keen source of pleasure. Before Lady Charnleigh had been many days at Crown Leighton her name was known wherever want or sorrow reigned. A hundred blessings were poured upon her, a hundred grateful hearts beat more quickly at the mention of her name—no light praise for a young girl who had the world at her feet.

Ethel Dacre was with her; and a note from Weildon told her that Paul Flemyng and Sir Bertram were there. Sir Bertram, then, was only seven miles from her! The grand old trees in her woods reached to the town where he was staying, the same sun shone for him, the same flowers bloomed, he was near her, and the world grew dazzlingly bright as she read the words.

She rose one morning, and said to herself that she would ask the two friends to dinner, and she laughed aloud—a sweet, rippling laugh—to think that she had only to wish and to be gratified.

"If Paul were one whit less noble than he is, coming to Crown Leighton would be a trial to him," she said to Miss Dacre as the two stood on the sunlit western terrace.

"I believe, in all honesty, were any question of ownership to arise, that he would far rather this noble estate became yours than his," observed Ethel, looking at the beautiful face. And Lady Charnleigh laughed again. It was very sweet and pleasant to hear how much she was loved, and among all her conquests she rated this one of le beau sabreur most highly.

"I could not be so disinterested," she rejoined, looking around. "I could not give up this lovely home of mine to any one or for any one."

Then she stopped abruptly. Yes, there was one for whom she could give it up, she thought—one whom she could follow into that cold world of poverty and privation from which she had been so glad to escape.

"You say you have sent an invitation to Sir Bertram Gordon as well as Captain Flemyng," remarked Ethel. "Has the baronet been here before? Does he know Crown Leighton at all?"

"No; it is his first visit," and Lady Charnleigh, bent low over some Banksia roses lest Ethel should wonder at the burning blush on her face.

Sir Bertram was coming that day, and Lady Charnleigh looked round her in proud, happy enjoyment of her magnificence—proud that this was all hers—proud to remember the magnificent dowry she would bring him when he asked her for the gift he valued most—her heart. She wandered, restlessly happy, on that bright summer day, through the sumptuous rooms, changing flowers on the stands, rearranging vases and statuettes, all to please his eyes. It was to her as though a king were coming—he was her king. The restless, bright day seemed as though it would never pass—she wandered, with sweet snatches of song upon her lips, from the house to the gardens and back again.

Shiploads of Australians Seeking Homes in South America.

A curious emigration movement has recently started in Australia. One would suppose that the conditions of life in that country are greatly preferable to those in Paraguay, but there are those, apparently, who imagine that they can attain greater prosperity in the latter land, and hence the movement now in progress, of which one William Lane, a prominent labor leader, is the organizer. The first contingent of 200 emigrants have already sailed from Sidney and these will be followed during the year by 1,000 others. The government of Paraguay, according to the London Graphic, "has given a tract of land to the emigrants, who reckon among their ranks skilled hands in every branch of industry, and who take with them all the necessary materials for a new settlement on virgin soil. Money is not lacking, for the lowest fee for male members is $300, while the rich are supposed to contribute their all to the common fund. Women pay no entrance fee, but in other respects they are to be placed in the new commonwealth on an absolute equality with men. The association is to be worked entirely on co-operative principles, without currency and it is to be composed of a number of village communities, each self-administrative, and all held in check by an elective president. There is a strong feeling on the temperance question, and all members have temporarily taken the pledge. Bushmen, laborers, artisans, sailors, with a sprinkling of professionals, have flocked from Queensland, New South Wales, and South Australia. Schools, printing offices, newspapers and manufactures are to be speedily started."

Our Criminals and Paupers.

Of the convicts in our penitentiaries 48 per cent. are of native parentage, while 52 per cent. are of foreign birth and parentage; or, in other words, while persons of foreign birth and parentage furnish a little more than one-third of the total white population of the country, they furnish more than half of the criminals.

Of the paupers in almshouses 41 per cent. are of native parentage, and 59 per cent. of foreign birth or parentage. Again it will be noticed that while persons of foreign birth or parentage furnish only one-third of the population, they supply nearly two-thirds of the paupers in almshouses. In this last case, however, it is proper to go a little more into detail. Of the 59 per cent. of paupers of foreign birth or parentage only 8 per cent. are born in this country, while 51 per cent. are foreign-born. These last figures are startling. The foreign-born constitute only 17 per cent. of our total white population—in round numbers about a sixth—and yet they furnish over half of all the paupers in almshouses throughout the country. This fact of itself certainly shows that an immigration which supplies more than half the inmates of our almshouses might, to say the least, be sifted with great advantage.

The Queen Was Spanked.

Little Queen Wilhelmina of Holland is credited with the possession of a particularly intractable temper, which she inherited from her disreputable old papa. Not long ago, while driving out with her governess, she became sulky, and refused to return the salutes of the people in the streets. As a punishment she was ordered to bed immediately upon her return to the palace.

"What!" she exclaimed. "Am I, the Queen of the Netherlands, to go to bed at seven o'clock? I won't do it."

But she did do it, being persuaded thereto by a slipper wielded by the Queen Regent, who brooks no disobedience.

A Live Toad in a Hail Stone.

A hail storm visited Pawtucket the other evening, such as has not visited that vicinity for years, if within the memory of man. One woman picked up a large hail stone and allowed it to melt in her hand. She thought something was inside the little piece of frozen rain, but was surprised to find when all had melted a little live toad or frog in her hand. There is a quite general belief that a great many pebbles came down with the hail.

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S dogs, cat and canary bird are mentioned dozens of times in his poems.

THE CLERGYMAN — "And why should little boys say their prayer every night?" The Good Boy—"So's the Lord can have a chance to get what they want by morning."—Life.

PAPA—Won't you be glad when you are a big man, Harry? Harry—No, papa. Papa—Why not? Harry—Why, because then I cannot get into the circus for half price.—Harper's Young People.

PEDESTRIAN—You should be in better business than begging. A great, strong fellow like you ought to look for work. Beggar—What! Throw up a sure thing for an uncertainty?—Tid-Bits.

SINGLETON—In her girlhood days your wife was possessed of a very sunny disposition. Has she any of it yet? Longwed — Well—er—enough to make things warm for me occasionally.—Buffalo Courier.

"AREN'T you glad you have a little brother to play with, Tom?" inquired a neighbor referring to the fortnight-old Snow baby. "Play with!" echoed Tom, scornfully. "Why, he can't even wash his own face!"—Exchange.

AT THE CLUB.—Mr. Murray Hill—"You here, Uptown? Why, I understood your daughter was to be married to-night." Mr. Uptown—"So she is; but I make it a rule never to mix in other people's affairs."—Texas Siftings.

AN error of the press, for which an ample apology must be forthcoming: When you think you're pressing the foot of the pretty niece under the table and find you've accidentally been pressing that of the elderly maiden aunt.—Drake's Magazine.

MR. EASTSIDE—"I heard you had the bad luck to upset your plate of soup over a lady's silk dress at the dinner yesterday." Mr. Westside—"Yes, it was pretty hard luck for me. You know it is contrary to etiquette to ask for a second plate of soup."—Texas Siftings.

MAUD—And, pa, what did Prof. Crotchet say of my piano playing? Pa—He was quite extravagant in his praise. He said you possessed an originality in execution that was truly remarkable. He said he had heard some of your pieces performed by the greatest masters, and not one of them played as you did.—Boston Transcript.

Cause for Thankfulness.

An exchange relates this incident of life in an apartment house:

Boy—Father sent me up to say that he would be very thankful if you wouldn't lay any more carpets to-night; he can't sleep.

New Tenant—Go down and tell your father not to let my hammering prevent him from feeling thankful. Tell him to be thankful his carpets are laid, and above all to be thankful he sent you up instead of coming himself.

OUR late guest the Infanta Eulalia has been kicking up her royal heels all summer at Royat, to the great delight of the sojourners at that fashionable watering place. She is daily expected in England to take her children, who have been staying in London under the charge of a governess, back to Madrid. She will then go to Paris, where she will spend the winter.

READ.—SPEAR HEAD possesses more qualities of intrinsic value than any other plug tobacco produced. It is the sweetest, the toughest, the richest. SPEAR HEAD is absolutely, positively and distinctively different in flavor from any other plug tobacco. A trial will convince the most skeptical of this fact. It is the largest seller of any similar shape and style on earth, which proves that it has caught the popular taste and pleases the people. Try it, and participate in the contest for prizes. See that a TIN TAG is on every 10 cent piece of SPEAR HEAD you buy. Send in the tags, no matter how small the quantity.

Very sincerely,
THE P. J. SORG COMPANY, MIDDLETOWN, OHIO.

A list of the people obtaining these prizes in this county will be published in this paper immediately after February 1st, 1894.

2 JOHNS 2

There's some mighty weighty argument in our remarks to-day, so you had better lend a willing ear to what we have to say:

A CASE OF COMPULSION.

Such Splendid Goods as ours were never before marked down so low, but we've got to have the money and the goods have to go.

It is not because it gives us either pleasure or profit, but because we are compelled to make the best of having bought a stock too large and too fine for these panicky times, that we inaugurate this

GREAT SURRENDER SALE

Of ours, which is now filling our store with eager buyers.

We overbought and overstocked ourselves, before the panic, with fine goods in every department; and now we must stand the loss, because we cannot help ourselves. These are all New, Seasonable and High Grade Goods—better than you'll find in any house in the county—and on them we srurender all the profit at the prices we are forced to quote.

Men's Suits and Overcoats.

Men's Suits—$3 50, $4.50, $5 00, $6.00, $8.00, $10.00, $12.00, $14.00, $15.00, $16 00, $18.00 and $20 00.

Men's Overcoats from $5.00 to $18.00.

Boys' Suits and Overcoats.

Boys' Suits in Knee Pants from $1.00 to $6.00.

Boys' Long Pants Suits from $3.00 to $15 00.

Children's Overcoats from $2.00 to $6.00.

Every garment quoted above is worth double the price advertised.
Our goods cannot be bought any cheaper than we are selling them now.
We are selling them at lowest prices. No one can sell cheaper.
Men's Furnishings, Hats and Caps at Competition Crushing Prices.

Boston ONE PRICE Clothing Store, Auburn.

Musical Contest.

We have received from the publishers, the two great rival marches, "Protective Tariff Grand March," and "Free Trade Grand March." The former is by the well known author, Will L. Thompson, of East Liverpool, Ohio. The latter is by Wm. Lamartine, an author of equal talent, and both pieces are beautiful, bright and showy marches of medium difficulty for the piano or organ. Price 40 cents each. They are for sale at all music stores, or may be procured from Mr. Thompson at one-half price. One firm alone has ordered 15,000 copies.

Testimonial.

When Mrs. J. H. St. Clair, of Hawley, Kansas, was back a year or two ago, she bought a Swing Washer of Mr. Meese. This last summer Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pommert, of this place, spent part of the summer with Mr. St. Clair's family, Mr. S., being a brother of Mrs. Pommert. The two ladies used the washing machine, and Mrs. Pommert became as enthusiastic over it, as was Mrs. St. Clair, and on her return to Auburn, she got one of her own, and uses it each week. Both ladies agree that it does its work quicker, better and is much pleasanter to work with, than any other machine. As it is closed, the steam does not escape to drench the walls, or to heat up the person, making it more pleasant to hang out the clothes. Both ladies authorize us to say that no washer they ever tried is equal to the Auburn Swing Washer. It is easy to operate and does its work quickly.

Personal.

Bear in mind one thing, that if business, pleasure or necessity calls you away from home at any time, be sure to have your route fully decided upon and arranged before starting.

Many things should be taken into consideration, especially the inducements offered by the Wisconsin Central Company to those who wish to visit St. Paul, Minneapolis, Ashland, West Superior, Duluth or any point in Wisconsin.

Their trains leave Chicago at convenient hours. Their equipment is unsurpassed by any line in the Northwest.

Close connections are made at St. Paul and Minneapolis with the various lines running to all California and Pacific coast points.

Ask your nearest ticket agent for full information, and be particular to see that your ticket reads via the "Wisconsin Central Lines."

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....DECEMBEB 7, 1893.

PERSIA had 160 earthquake shocks last week. Many lives were lost.

INDIANAPOLIS gets the next state meeting of the Christian Endeavor.

PARTIES in Laporte county have got into jail by breaking the law in regard to fishing.

RAILROADS paid into the DeKalb county treasury not far from $30,000 for taxes for 1892.

CONGRESS met in regular session on Monday. This is its first term proper and may last all next summer.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL has been given a place and inscription in Westminster Abbey. This is the second American to receive this high compliment. Longfellow being the first.

FOR thirty years under a protective tariff, farmers have seen their leading products go down in price. And yet, we suppose there are still some of them who will listen to the republican cry of "Let the tariff alone."

HOLMAN, of Indiana, has the right idea. He says, "Cut down expenses, and then the new tariff bill will supply money enough, or so near it, that a light income tax will even it up." We need more Holmans in congress.

HOLMAN, of Indiana, is now the "father" of the House of Representatives, having been continuously a member longer than any other man now in the House. The last "father," O'Neal of Pennsylvania, died about a week ago.

JESUITS were expelled from Germany a few years ago. Last week, the German parliament voted to let them come back. The present emperor is more liberal toward this branch of the catholics than his father or grandfather. Bismarck was originally to blame for the trouble.

VANALEN, who was this summer made minister to Italy, has resigned. He says he gave a fair sum of money during the campaign of the year before, but it had nothing to do with his appointment. He resigns because he is tired of being misrepresented and thinks no one should accept office under such circumstances.

THE democratic state committee made a fool of itself last week, by issuing a bombastic address, the like of which was never seen before. It went so far as to tell what "we did in Congress," and "why we did it," and what "we propose to do." Later. We are glad to hear that the state committee had nothing to do with it. But how came it in the papers?

THE President's message is out. It treats of the subjects now before the people, such as silver, tariff, the Sandwich Islands, pensions, and economy. He says what he has to say, plainly and to the point. It can all be understood. The most admirable part is his earnest plea for economy, for he thinks vast sums of money can be saved at many points. The message in full is on our inside pages.

Exact number of paid entries to the world's fair is 21,480,141. This statement was made by the officers to settle the prizes given by Liggett & Myers, the St. Louis tobacco manufacturers. It will be remembered they advertised in the COURIER and other leading papers last spring, that they would give $20,000 in cash premiums to those guessing the nearest to the number. The first prize, $5,000 went to a man who guessed 21,480,121; the second $1,000 to a man who guessed 21,480,202, and so on, 372 prizes being given.

Christmas Bazar.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian church will hold a Christmas Bazar on Dec. 15 and 16 in the church parlors. The young people have been preparing for this for some months and earnestly request that all those desiring to purchase Christmas presents will defer buying until they see what the young people have to sell.

The Train Robbery.

It now turns out that the attempted train robbery on the Lake Shore between Elkhart and Goshen, a week ago last Saturday, was only a battle with tramps.

They did not expect to wreck and rob the express train that was behind them. They wanted to run the train, and in the fight that followed they overpowered the train men and, on the spur of the moment, robbed them. Zimmerman, the Kendallville man who was arrested, is out on $500 bonds. Cone, the other man taken, proves an "alibi," that is, that he was at another place at the time. None of the rest can be found.

Notice to Stockholders.

The directors and stockholders of the Northeastern Indiana Agricultural Association of Waterloo, Indiana will meet in the secretary's office in Waterloo on Thursday December 28, 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of electing a new corps of officers and directors for the ensuing year and to transact any other business that may come legally before the meeting.

CHALLENGED!

During the Month of December, and right in the presence of

JACK FROST,

We Challenge the Whole Country to meet the Slaughtering Prices we are offering on MEN'S and BOYS' CLOTHING. We purpose to make this Challenge Sale the important one of our retail career. The price on every article in the house, including Men's, Boys' and Children's Suits, Overcoats, Hats, Caps and Furnishing Goods, will be reduced during this Challenge Sale, which involves a loss of money to us. But, no matter, we have the goods and must dispose of them, so take advantage of the tempting prices we will give you during the sale. We challenge all of them to meet us in quality and low prices. The Bargain Counter and the Special Sale are not in it with this great Challenge Sale.

New Paper at Garrett.

We have many good friends among the people at Garrett, and have often said they needed a paper there that they would not be ashamed of, as they have been of the Clipper. Now they are to have one, and while it is to be a republican paper, we hope, for their sake it will be a decent one. E. W. Miner, who has been for some time publishing the "World" at Hudson, has become satisfied that Hudson cannot support such a paper as he would like to publish, and so he moves the plant this week, to Garrett and will then issue the "Garrett Republican." While we shall oppose the politics of the new paper, we shall wish it financial and social success. We hope the people of Garrett will remain true to their old-time democratic principles, but at the same time give their patronage to a decent paper, run as we hope by decent men. They can do this without losing sight of democratic principles, for democracy means decency and patriotic impulses in all things. The Clipper has given Garrett a bad name; let the new paper help to redeem it. And to secure the advantages of a decent paper, the good citizens there must give the newcomer a friendly welcome.

The Opening of Winter.

Winter began in earnest last week. Thursday there was a little snow and Friday morning the mercury went down almost to zero. Though still cold, the weather moderated somewhat that day. But on Saturday it began to snow in good earnest That evening we had one of the worst blizzards ever seen here, and by next morning the snow was about ten inches deep. Sleighs came out and the jingling of bells could be heard everywhere. But the early hours of the morning, though Sunday, had to be given over to snow shoveling. Then came Marshal Baker with the snow plow, and this helped many a weary man. The roads being in good shape, a little depth of snow would make good sleighing. The weather kept cold for some days, though not severely so.

Petty Meanness.

People at Newville and in that vicinity complain of chicken thieves and hoodlums, who commit other mean depredations. They are also said to kill old horses for their hides, if they can do it without discovery. In these ways they not only make a sort of livelihood, but are able to put in quite a small sum weekly into a poor grade of whisky. It is very unfortunate that communities are cursed with such people, but so it is. The good people of Newville are patient and long suffering, but we have an idea that if ever they get after these fellows, the fur will fly.

Mr. Penfield went up to Lima last week to see his son Walter, who is attending school there.

HOUSE TO RENT: Good new dwelling on West Ninth street. Inquire of W. J. Walsworth, east of town. 50

Mrs J. W. Jones returned last week from North Manchester, where she had been visiting friends for several weeks.

Dr. Johnston, dentist, has the new method of filling teeth without pain, as well as painless extraction of teeth.

The communion service at the Lutheran church was postponed until next Sabbath Dec 10. Everybody is cordially invited to attend.

John Buchanan, a prominent farmer of Fairfield township, died last Tuesday He was one of the most highly respected citizens of the county.

John W. Baxter went up to Albion Friday evening to attend to some court matter in which he was attorney, and which came off Saturday.

Charlie Pommert has put stained glass or an imitation of it, in the front door and transom at his barber shop. It is a pretty addition to the room.

The nickel social of the Presbyterian church will meet with Mrs. A. J. Ralston on next Friday afternoon. All are cordially invited to attend.

MARRIED:—Dec. 5, 1893, by O. P. Smith, J. P. at his office in Waterloo, Mr. David John to Miss Eva Lanning, both of Wilmington township.

The candies at the Union Bokery are fresh of course, for they are made there. An expert candy maker is employed there, and he makes candy every day.

Phil. Gibson starts for school at Fayette, Ohio, next week, where he will take a commercial course. Phil. is a steady, enterprising boy, and we hope to see him succeed.

A little son—their second—was born to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dills Tuesday. Little Johnny will have to take second place, but he won't lack for friends. He is everybody's friend.

LOST:—In Auburn on Friday, Dec. 1, a lady's gold watch and chain. Main spring of watch is broken. The party finding same will please leave at this office and receive reward. 49-51

MARRIED: November 30, 1893, at the residence of Elder James Barton, the officiating minister, in Richland township, Charles H Emerich, of Allen county to Lowella Barton, of DeKalb county.

Frank Wingard is a good judge of newspapers, as we have reasons to know He has for many years stood by the old reliable COURIER, and he now comes up smiling again and fixes things a year ahead.

The Mt. Ayr, Iowa, News sends out a big Thanksgiving edition, and the copy we received at least was on pink paper We suppose we are indebted to T. H. Leasure for this specimen of western enterprise.

S. P. Imhoff reports his mother, Mrs. Josiah Imhoff, at Waterloo as still in poor health, though they have hopes she may at least partially recover. Old Mr. Imhoff himself has been somewhat better of late.

A. O. Rhoads, of Newville, son of J. M. Rhoads was up here for Thanksgiving, and enjoyed the hospitality of Mr and Mrs. O. V. DeLong, the former being his cousin. He also took a trip to Fort Wayne before returning.

Walter Penfield came home Saturday from Lima, where he is attending school, The school is a good one, but like all properly constituted lads, he likes to come back to the home fireside now and then. He returned to school Monday.

Will Thomas is going into the candy business, which will include the manufacture and general dealing in candy. We are glad to note a new industry for Auburn. He will occupy one of the Draggoo rooms, south of the public square.

Mrs. Sophie Baird is spending a few weeks visiting the family of Phil Parnel, in Smithfield township, near Ashley. The two ladies are sisters. The COURIER chap has often shared the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Parnel, and knows that Mrs. Baird and all will have a pleasant time.

Sheriff Ralston went up to Michigan City this week to bring back Phelps, who was sent up from this county for robbing cars at Garrett. He is needed at Angola as a witness against Arnold, accused of the same crime, whose trial began there yesterday. Deputy Blum went to Angola with him.

Mr. Gordon, the retiring postmaster, leaves the office after a second term, with everything in the same admirable shape that he left it in at the time he went out before—in 1885. He has proved an excellent officer, and he and all his assistants have given the best of satisfaction. They have given the public good service, cheerfully rendered, and we think they all retire with the good will of all who have had dealings at Uncle Sam's postoffice in Auburn, for several years.

Rev. Henry Johnson was greeted by full audiences both morning and evening at the Presbyterian church, and delivered two very powerful sermons. It was here that he began his labors as a minister, and he is always as glad to meet our people as they are glad to welcome him. Mrs. Johnson returned to South Bend Satuaday and he followed on Monday, They have decided to go to Duluth, where the people have been asking him to come for the past year or two. It will be in the nature of another promotion, for the field is large, and the salary will be $5,000. The people of South Bend very naturly dislike to see see him go.

One package of Koal-Spar costs you 25 cents, and will save one quarter of a ton of coal. Frank Stamets, Auburn, will sell it in this county.

E. H. Fisher of Ft. Wayne, called on the COURIER last week, but we were absent at the time. We would have been pleased to meet him.

A son of James Stonebreaker at Corunna, was accidentally shot last week. The hurt is serious, and we do not know his condition at this writing.

The Times is having some fun at the expense of the Garrett Organ of Rape and Seduction. It has sized up the afore said organ in pretty correct shape.

Sheriff Ralston was taken sick on starting back from Michigan City Tuesday, but he was able to bring his man home all right. He is able to be out again now.

Miss Maggie Snyder will not meet her music class at Auburn this week on account of sickness at home. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are both confined to their bed by sickness.

In spite of the severe snow storm Saturday evening, the young people at the Presbyterian church were well patronized. A supper of nicely prepared chicken pie is always popular.

The ladies of the south section of the M. E. church will give a social in the basement Friday evening. All are cordially invited to be present. Mite 15 cents. Supper from 5 to 7.

Marshal Baker treated the little boys to a long sleighride Tuesday evening The imagination of man couldn't guess the number of happy, yelling lads that utterly hid the big sleigh from view.

As will be seen by an obituary this week, death has again visited the family of J. A. Sawyer. It was only a short time ago a son died, and now the mother is taken away. It is a sad bereavement.

LOST:—Sunday eve, Dec. 3, on Main street or West Seventh, a lady's gold watch. It has a horn and 5-cent piece on the chain. Finder please leave it at James Brinkerhoff's on South Main St., Auburn. 49-51

L. J. Gengler, of Garrett, was here yesterday. He brings word that notices are put up in the B & O. shops that a full force will be kept at work now for eight hours a day. This is good news to Garrett.

Martin Wetzel, of Sedan, was in to see us this week. He has to a great extent regained his health, and as his trouble with Martin Treesh has been settled to his satisfaction, we think he can settle down to the real enjoyment of life.

The C L S. C. will meet with Miss. Ober Saturday, at 2 p. m. Program; Roll call, currents; Rome and the Making of Modern Europe, Mrs. Nickey; Outlines of Economics, Mrs. McClellan; Village life in Ireland, Mrs. M. McClellan; Music, Mrs. Zent.

The loss of her finest school house by fire, will be severely felt by Franklin township. The Center house was new and one of the best in the county. By the foresight of Trustee Whetsel it was insured, but there can be no school at the Center this year.

Charlie Rukman lost his pocket-book in Auburn Saturday. It contained about $50 in cash and several valuable papers, such as county orders, etc. He got word Monday that it had been found by a lady who resides in Churubusco. So he has it back again.

The COURIER folks are under obligations to Fleming at the greenhouse for a supply of vegetables to go with that Thanksgiving turkey. And there was a fine bouquet of choice flowers besides, including some rare roses. He is taking a good deal of pains to produce choice roses and has a great many that are just coming into bloom.

The Auburn Foundry and Machine Works are starting up again in good shape after the partial rest of the summer. This is the most extensive foundry in northern Indiana, if we except Ft Wayne, and they can do anything in their line that can be done anywhere. They already receive orders from all over this end of the state, and their work is promptly done in a satisfactory manner.

The meeting of the Auburn Musical Club at Mr. Hastings' Monday evening, brought out a large attendance, including two or three invited guests. The exercises were excellent, especially the chorus singing, led by Mr. Hastings. This was followed by the regular program as we published it last week. Auburn has always had plenty of musical talent, but never so good an opportunity as this to improve it.

O. P. Houser says that old Fairfield retains her ability to come out ahead in spelling contests, as they carried off the prize at the teachers' convention at Waterloo last week. The award was given to Miss Sebert, whose mother, a daughter of Uncle Ed. Wright, used to be a good speller. At one of the last spelling contests in Auburn, several years ago, it will be remembered that W. N. Shatto of Fairfield got the first prize, $10 in gold. Mr. Houser himself is pretty good on the spell, and is an old-time Fairfielder himself.

Jonas Decker, a prominent business man of Ligonier, was found dead on the streets last week. Our informant, Dr. Buchtel, had a letter from his father, giving the details of the sad occurrence as far as known. It is supposed he was struggling to reach his home, as he had been a short distance to get a doctor for a neighbor who was sick. It is believed apoplexy was the trouble.

Thursday last Thanksgiving day, was just three years since Billy Edgington got out of his room after the severe sickness that brought him so close to deaths door. From that day, also he "turned over a new leaf," and is now one of the steadiest citizens we have, He has a nice new room in the King building on South Main, for his barber shop, and we believe is doing well. Glad to hear it.

The books of the auditor and treasurer show about $5,000 more taxes collected this November than a year ago. Possibly the railroads are finding out that they must pay when others do. This also goes to show that the treasurer may soon call in more orders. DeKalb county orders are good property these days, and those who tried to get up a scare about them can now see how near right they were.

We have a game rumor that our friend R. W. Cobb will engage in business in Auburn. Mr. Cobb has "since giving up his profession" been an extensive traveler in this country, having crossed the continent eight times, covering nearly every state in the union and is no doubt tired of sight seeing, and being absent from home so much of the time. He recently refused to accept an opportunity of going into business, with flattering prospects, in a large and growing city on the Pacific coast, owing to his dislike of moving his family so far from home.

If the animals only played football, what a full-back the dromedary would make!

The trouble into which Prince Engalitchiff has fallen in St. Louis serves him right. He should have known better than to go to a town where they don't know a real prince from a barber baron.

Joe Jefferson was enjoying a quiet dinner at the Delmonico when that New York crank fired in through the window. There will be a realistic touch in his Bob Acres hereafter that he has never been able to impart to it heretofore.

When a well-known character was told that the people of France were rebellious because they had no bread she asked: "Why do not they eat cake?" Since a new method has been found for dispensing with a cook and the kitchen fire, instead of seeking a way to abolish poverty the question should be, Why do you not get a chafing dish?

The English language, like the Anglo-Saxon race, goes forth conquering an to conquer. The German scholar, Prof. Scheer, has just confirmed the dictum of Mr. Girdstone that our mother tongue is the coming world-speech. During this century the English-speaking population of the globe has risen from less than 25,000,000 to more than 125,000,000—an increase without precedent.

An Illinois murderer sentenced to be hanged asked the Sheriff for "lots to eat" before the time came for the execution. It appears that the fear of death does not at least take away a man's appetite, and he always seems to sleep well on the night previous to his taking off. The man with a clear conscience, who sleeps only at intervals and who cannot eat a "square meal" once a week, may take to reflecting on these facts, but he should not think on them too long lest he become a criminal merely for the benefit of his health.

The New York newspapers are in a state of mind because one man—just one man—was run down and killed by a Broadway cable car last week. One paper is inclined to believe that "the cable system is too dangerous for use in this city." Poor unfortunates, they haven't fairly tasted the bitter cup yet! Let the New Yorkers wait till the juggernaut gets fairly going. There are no tunnels on Broadway or Third avenue to furnish real first-page sensations such as they have in Chicago, but dangerous crossings abound. If, after the cable car, begin running full time, the death list does not average one a day instead of one a week the good people of New York may conclude that they are under the especial protection of providence.

Free mail delivery has been in operation experimentally for the past two years in forty-six towns and villages varying from 800 to 4,000 inhabitants. The results are not encouraging to the belief that free delivery in country places will result in a large increase of business. It will pretty certainly result in an increase of postal expenditures by $20,000,000 or more, and then not give very good accommodation to the rural public. First Assistant Postmaster General Jones has had charge of this delivery, and he will recommend that it be suspended at the close of the fiscal year. The postal revenues last year increased nearly $5,000,000, or seven per cent. The improvement of country roads is for the present a more practical benefit to the farming population than would be carrying their mail to them through the mud. If there were good roads going for the mail would be only a pleasure. Farmers are shut up at home too much as it is, and this isolation is what drives so many of them to the cities and large villages for companionship.—American Cultivator.

When the announcement was made that the Czar of Russia took 300 trunks with him on his recent visit to Copenhagen some surprise was expressed that his Majesty was so well supplied with funds as to justify such an array of baggage. It had been supposed that money was pretty tight in St. Petersburgh. In fact, the recently developed affection of Russia for France was thought to have a money-borrowing side to it. It appears, however, according to a presumably veracious London paper that the Czar has never been short of funds. When threatened with financial stringency he simply put into operation a law providing for the seizure of 75 per cent. of the money transmitted to or by his subjects through the mails. The subjects get government bonds for these forced loans, and thus the exchequer is replenished. The fact that Russian bonds are about as desirable an investment as stock in the late Chicago Spectatorium has nothing to do with the case. The Empire would be shaken to the foundation if the Czar had to start for Copenhagen with only 299 trunks.

Train robberies have set the able editors writing about the desirability of a Federal statute for the punishment of this form of brigandage. There is no objection to such an enactment, but it would probably do no particular good. Train robbers are the most desperate class of criminals. Burglars and even highwaymen seldom meet with vigorous armed resistance. Their victims are confused or frightened and unable to act quickly and intelligently. But when train robbers attack an express car they know that they are likely to be met by armed men, vigilant and determined and on the alert for just such attacks. They take these chances deliberately and they stake their lives on the wage of battle. They care nothing about laws—State or federal. They kill or are killed, and they know that if captured they need expect no mercy. For such men a Federal statute has no more terrors than a State enactment has. They don't know the difference, and if they did know they wouldn't care. They are gamblers who stake their lives against a rich haul of plunder, and if they are to be hanged they will care but little whether a Deputy Sheriff or a United States Marshal springs the trap. Such men are not to be deterred from crime by the name of the Federal Government or by anything else short of cold lead in allopathic doses.—Chicago Herald.

The larger the number of German battalions the louder the cry of the German Emperor for peace. The more he arms the greater his protest that he is without a hostile purpose. The reichstag called together anew has been addressed by the German Emperor in person. Without compunction he informs them and through them the country that he proposes to tax further for the maintenance of armies. In his speech from the throne he says that "Germany's foreign relations are unchanged. The country continues in the closest friendship with allied powers who with us follow common, peaceful aims. Germany's allies also maintain peaceful relations with all the powers." The dullest intelligence discerns the hollowness of these pretensions. More than ever Germany is an armed camp, more than ever its people are burdened by the mighty cost of maintaining a vast standing army withdrawn from the fields of gainful pursuit and eating the bread of idleness. Talking peace to the National Legislature the Emperor upon the same day took part in a different scene. The troops from barracks in and about Berlin were massed about the castle and required to take an oath of allegiance, a ceremony in which both Protestants and Catholic chaplains, nominally servants of the Prince of Peace but actually in the pay and entirely subservient to the Prince of war, assisted. The remarks of the Emperor to these troops showed his belief that he is in fact absolute as a monarch. "You have sworn to me allegiance," he said, "by the Fahneneid, and you are bound to serve me by land or water." Even in this army, where individuality is dwarfed by the necessities of military discipline, there must have been at least mental dissent against the proposition that these great masses of troops were held together for no other purpose than to serve an Emperor. Some of them must have held the opinion that their service was primarily to the State. But wherever militarism is the rule the absolutist flourishes.

Too Cautious.

A striking instance of an effort at self-protection which was carried to an egotistical, selfish extreme, and which brought about its own severe punishment, is related by the author of a narrative of curious incidents of the French Revolution. The father of Gueau de Reverseaux had been a distinguished lawyer, and through his influence he held important offices under the Government. When the Revolution began he gave up his office at La Rochelle, and retired to Chartres.

From the time that the Revolution began Gueau de Reverseaux devoted his attention exclusively to preserving his own safety. He wrote no letters, he would receive no letters; he saw no visitors, and paid no visits; he spoke to no person, and allowed no one to come near him. It would have been impossible to be more prudent than he was.

However, he wanted some sheds built on his farm near Chartres, and ventured to consult a carpenter. The carpenter told him that he could not undertake the work immediately, as Gueau de Reverseaux wished, because most of his workmen were drafted to join the army at once.

Gueau de Reverseaux replied, "The workmen need not go; they can send substitutes."

This remark was heard by the workmen, but only the first phrase made any impression on them. They reported everywhere that Monsieur Gueau de Reverseaux, who must be good authority, had said that they need not go. The news went to headquarters that Gueau de Reverseaux declared that the drafted workmen need not obey the government. This was considered to be conspiracy, and he was condemned to death. He was at once taken to the Conciergerie prison, and he paid for his selfish folly with his life.

Girl and Fiddle in the Organ.

The Rev. Dr. Wild preached at the Western Congregational Church the other evening. During the offertory a small surprise was worked on the congregation. The sweet sound of a violin came from somewhere—no one seemed to know exactly where, though the fact that the organist was playing a soft accompaniment led many to believe that he was doing it himself. It transpired, though, that the hidden soloist was Miss Lena Hayes, who had taken up a position inside the organ itself. The effect was very fine.—Toronto News.

MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

The President Submits His Annual Address.

REVIEW OF AFFAIRS.

HAWAII TO RECEIVE ATTENTION LATER.

Our Relations with Foreign Powers—Finances of the Government—Work of the Several Departments—Advises Delay in Dealing with the Currency Subject—Passage of the Wilson Tariff Measure Is Recommended—Course of the Pension Bureau Approved, Etc.

President Cleveland's message to the Fifty-third Congress in regular session was delivered to that body without delay on its assemblage at Washington. The organization of both branches having been effected at the late special session, there was nothing to interfere with the regular order of business. The message is of unusual length, exceeding in this respect Mr. Cleveland's famous address of 1885. A considerable part of the document is devoted to the Wilson tariff bill, silver purchase repeal, and the subject of pensions. Hawaiian matters are but briefly touched upon, the President indicating that he will submit a special message on this complication later. The message reads as follows:

To the Congress of the United States: The constitutional duty which requires the President from time to time to give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient, is fittingly entered upon by commending to the Congress a careful examination of the detailed statements and well supported recommendations contained in the reports of the heads of departments, who are chiefly charged with the executive work of the Government. In an effort to abridge this communication as much as is convenient with its purpose I shall supplement a brief reference to the contents of these departmental reports by the mention of such executive business and incidents as are not embraced therein, and by such recommendations as appear to be at this particular time appropriate.

While our foreign relations have not at all times during the past year been entirely free from perplexity, no embarrassing situations remain that will not yield to the spirit of fairness and love of justice, which, joined with consistent firmness, characterize a truly American foreign policy. My predecessor having accepted the office of arbitrator of the long-standing missions boundary dispute, tendered to the President by the Argentine Republic and Brazil, it has been my agreeable duty to receive the special envoys commissioned by those states to lay befor me evidence and arguments in behalf of their respective governments.

Relations with Brazil.

The outbreak of domestic hostilities in the Republic of Brazil found the United States alert to watch the interests of our citizens in that country, with which we carry on important commerce. Several vessels of our new navy are now, and for some time have been, stationed at Rio de Janeiro. The struggle being between the established Government, which controls the machinery of administration, and with which we maintain friendly relations, and certain officers of the navy employing the vessels of their command in an attack upon the national capital and chief seaport, I have failed to see that the insurgents can reasonably claim recognition as belligerents. Thus far the position of our Government has been that of an attentive but impartial observer of the unfortunate conflict. Emphasizing our fixed policy of impartial neutrality in such a condition of affairs as now exists, I deemed it necessary to disavow, in a manner not to be misunderstood, the unauthorized action of the late naval commander in those waters in saluting the revolted Brazilian Admiral, being indisposed to countenance an act calculated to give gratuitous sanction to the local insurrection.

Chilian Complications.

The convention between our Government and Chili, having for its object the settlement and adjustment of the demands of the two countries against each other, has been made effective by the organization of the Claims Commission provided for. The two governments failing to agree upon the third member of the commission, the good offices of the President of the Swiss republic were invoked, as provided in the treaty, and the selection of the Swiss representative in this country to complete the organization was gratifying alike to the United States and Chili. The vexatious question of so-called legation asylum for offenders against the state and its laws was presented anew in Chili by the unauthorized action of the late United States Minister in receiving into his residence two persons who had just failed in an attempt at revolution and against whom criminal charges were pending, growing out of a former abortive disturbance. A temperate demand having been made by the Chilian Government for the correction of this conduct in the instance mentioned, the minister was instructed no longer to harbor the offenders.

Registration of Chinese.

The legislation of last year, known as the Geary law, requiring the registration of all Chinese laborers entitled to residence in the United States, and the deportation of all not complying with the provisions of the act within the time prescribed, met with much opposition from Chinamen in this country. Acting upon the advice of eminent counsel that the law was unconstitutional, the great mass of Chinese laborers, pending judicial inquiry as to its validity, in good faith declined to apply for the certificates required by its provisions. A test case upon proceedings by habeas corpus was brought before the Supreme Court, and on May 15, 1893, a decision was made by that tribunal sustaining the law. It is believed that, under the recent amendment to the act extending the time for registration, the Chinese laborers thereto entitled who desire to reside in this country will now avail themselves of the renewed privilege thus afforded of establishing by lawful procedure their right to remain, and that thereby the necessity of enforcing deportation may to a great degree be avoided.

It has devolved upon the United States Minister at Peking, as dean of the diplomatic body, and in the absence of a representative of Sweden and Norway, to press upon the Chinese Government reparation for the recent murder of Swedish missionaries at Sung-Pu. This question is of vital interest to all countries whose citizens engage in missionary work in the interior.

Costa Rica's Friendliness.

Costa Rica has lately testified its friendliness by surrendering to the United States, in the absence of a convention of extradition, but upon duly submitted evidence of criminality, a noted fugitive from justice. It is trusted that the negotiation of a treaty with that country to meet recurring cases of this kind will soon be accomplished. In my opinion treaties for reciprocal extradition should be concluded with all those countries with which the United States has not already conventional arrangements of that character. I have deemed it fitting to express to the governments of Costa Rica and Colombia the kindly desire of the United States to see their pending boundary dispute finally closed by arbitration in conformity with the spirit of the treaty concluded between them some years ago. Our relations with the French Republic continue to be intimate and cordial. I sincerely hope that the extradition treaty with that country, as amended by the Senate, will soon be operative. While occasional questions affecting our naturalized citizens returning to the land of their birth, have arisen in our intercourse with Germany, our relations with that country continue satisfactory.

Relations with Great Britain.

The questions affecting our relations with Great Britain have been treated in a spirit of friendliness. Negotiations are in progress between the two Governments with a view to such concurrent action as will make the award and regulations agreed upon by the Behring Sea tribunal of arbitration practically effective; and it is not doubted that Great Britain will co-operate freely with this country for the accomplishment of that purpose. The dispute growing out of the discriminating tolls imposed in the Welland Canal upon cargoes of cereals bound to and from the lake ports of the United States was adjusted by the substitution of a more equitable schedule of charges, and my predecessor thereupon suspended his proclamation imposing discriminating tolls upon British transit through our canals.

A request for additions to the list of extraditable offenses covered by the existing treaty between the two countries is under consideration.

During the past year an American citizen, employed in a subordinate commercial position in Hayti, after suffering a protracted imprisonment on an unfounded charge of smuggling, was finally liberated on judicial examination. Upon urgent representation to the Haytian Government, a suitable indemnity was paid to the sufferer.

Upon receiving authentic information of the firing upon an American mail steamer touching at the port of Amapala, because her captain refused to deliver up a passenger from Nicaragua to Guatemala, upon demand of the military authorities of Honduras, our Minister to that country under instructions protested against the wanton act and demanded satisfaction. The government of Honduras, actuated by a sense of justice, and in a spirit of the utmost friendship, promptly disavowed the illegal conduct of its officers and expressed sincere regret for the occurrence.

Interest in Liberia.

A notable part of the southeasterly coast of Liberia between the Cavally and San Pedro Rivers, which for nearly half a century has been generally recognized as belonging to that republic by cession and purchase, has been claimed to be under the protectorate of France in virtue of an agreement entered into by the native tribes over whom Liberia's control has not been well maintained. More recently negotiations between the Liberian representative and the French Government resulted in the signature at Paris of a treaty whereby as an adjustment certain Liberian territory is ceded to France. This convention at last advices had not been ratified by the Liberian Legislature and executive.

Our relations with Mexico continue to be of that close and friendly nature which should always characterize the intercourse of two neighboring republics. The work of relocating the monuments marking the boundary between the countries from Paso del Norte to the Pacific is now nearly completed. The commission recently organized under the conventions of 1884 and 1889, it is expected, will speedily settle disputes growing out of the shifting currents of the Rio Grande River east of El Paso.

Nicaragua and the Canal.

Nicaragua has recently passed through two revolutions, the party at first successful having in turn been displaced by another. Our newly appointed Minister, by his timely good offices, aided in a peaceful adjustment of the controversy involved in the first conflict. The large American interests established in that country in connection with the Nicaragua Canal were not molested. The canal company has unfortunately become financially seriously embarrassed, but a generous treatment has been extended to it by the Government of Nicaragua. The United States are especially interested in the successful achievement of the vast undertaking this company has in charge. That it should be accomplished under distinctively American auspices, and its enjoyment assured not only to the vessels of this country as a channel of communication between our Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, but to the ships of the world in the interests of civilization, is a proposition which, in my judgment, does not admit of question.

Gautemala has also been visited by the political vicissitudes which have afflicted her Central American neighbors; but the dissolution of its legislature and the proclamation of a dictatorship have been unattended with civil war.

An extradition treaty with Norway has recently been exchanged and proclaimed. The extradition treaty with Russia signed in March, 1887, and amended and confirmed by the Senate in February last, was duly proclaimed last June.

Triple Protectorate of Samoa.

Led by a desire to compose differences and contribute to the restoration of order in Samoa, which for some years previous had been the scene of conflicting foreign pretentions and native strife, the United States, departing from its policy consecrated by a century of observance, entered four years ago into the treaty of Berlin, thereby becoming jointly bound with England and Germany to establish and maintain Malietoa Lanpepi as King of Samoa. Early in the life of this triple protectorate, the native dissentions it was designed to quell revived. Quite lately, at the request of the other powers, and in fulfillment of its treaty obligation, this Government agreed to unite in a joint military movement of such dimensions as would probably secure the surrender of the insurgents without bloodshed. The warship Philadelphia was accordingly put under orders for Samoa, but before she arrived the threatened conflict was precipitated by King Malietoa's attack upon the insurgents' camp. Mataafa was defeated and a number of men killed. The British and German naval vessels present subsequently secured the surrender of Mataafa and his adherents. This incident and the events leading up to it signally illustrate the impolicy of entangling alliances with foreign powers.

Claims Against Spain.

More than fifteen years ago this Government preferred a claim against Spain in behalf of one of our citizens for property seized and confiscated in Cuba. In 1886 the claim was adjusted, Spain agreeing to pay unconditionally as a fair indemnity $1,500,000. A respectful but earnest note was recently addressed to the Spanish Government insisting upon a prompt fulfillment of its long neglected obligation. Other claims, preferred by the United States against Spain in behalf of American citizens for property confiscated in Cuba, have been pending for many years. At the time Spain's title to the Caroline Islands was confirmed by arbitration, that Government agreed that the rights which had been acquired there by American missionaries should be recognized and respected. The reproduced caravel, Santa Maria, built by Spain and sent to the Columbian Exposition, has been presented to the United States in token of amity and in commemoration of the event it was designed to celebrate. I recommend that, in accepting this gift, Congress make grateful recognition of the sincere friendship which prompted it.

American Missions in Turkey.

Important matters have demanded attention in our relations with the Ottoman Porte. The firing and partial destruction, by an unrestrained mob, of one of the school buildings of Anatolia College, established by citizens of the United States at Marsovan, and the apparent indifference of the Turkish Government to the outrage, notwithstanding the complicity of some of its officials, called for earnest remonstrance, which was followed by promises of reparation and punishment of the offenders. Indemnity for the injury to the buildings has already been paid, permission to rebuild given, registration of the school property in the name of the American owners secured, and efficient protection guaranteed.

Hawaiian Situation.

It is hardly necessary for me to state that questions arising from our relations with Hawaii have caused serious embarrassment. Just prior to the installation of the present administration the existing government of Hawaii had been suddenly overthrown and a treaty of annexation had been negotiated between the Provisional Government of the islands and the United States and submitted to the Senate for ratification. This treaty I withdrew for examination, and dispatched the Hon. James H. Blount, of Georgia, to Honolulu, as a special commissioner to make an impartial investigation of the circumstances attending the change of government, and of all the conditions bearing upon the subject of the treaty. After a thorough and exhaustive examination Mr. Blount submitted to me his report showing beyond all question that the Constitutional Government of Hawaii had been subverted with the active aid of our representative to that Government, and through the intimidation caused by the presence of an armed naval force of the United States, which was landed for that purpose at the instance of our Minister. Upon the facts developed it seemed to me the only honorable course for our Government to pursue was to undo the wrong that had been done by those representing us, and to restore, as far as practicable, the status existing at the time of our forcible intervention. With a view of accomplishing this result within the constitutional limits of obligations and responsibilities growing out of any changed conditions brought about by our unjustifiable interference, our present Minister at Honolulu has received appropriate instructions to that end. Thus far no information of the accomplishment of any definite results has been received from him. Additional advices are soon expected. When received they will be promptly sent to the Congress, together with all other information at hand, accompanied by a special executive message fully detailing all the facts necessary to a complete understanding of the case, and presenting a history of all the material events leading up to the present situation.

Arbitration of National Disputes.

By a concurrent resolution, passed by the Senate Feb. 14, 1890, and by the House of Representatives on the 3d of April following, the President was requested "to invite from time to time, as fit occasions may arise, negotiations with any government with which the United States has or may have diplomatic relations, to the end that any differences or disputes arising between the two governments which can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency may be referred to arbitration and be peaceably adjusted by such means. "April 18, 1890, the International American Conference of Washington, by a resolution, expressed the wish that all controversies between the republics of America and the nations of Europe might be settled by arbitration, and recommended that the government of each nation represented in that conference should communicate this wish to all friendly powers. A favorable response has been received from Great Britain in the shape of a resolution adopted by Parliament July 16 last, cordially sympathizing with the purpose in view.

The monetary conference which assembled at Brussels, upon our invitation, was adjourned to the 30th day of November in the present year. The considerations just stated, and the fact that a definite proposition from us seemed to be expected upon the re assembling of the conference, led me to express a willingness to have the meeting still further postponed It seems to me that it would be wise to give general authority to the President to invite other nations to such a conference at any time when there should be a fair prospect of accomplishing an international agreement on the subject of coinage. I desire also to earnestly suggest the wisdom of amending existing statutes in regard to the issuance of Government bonds. The authority now vested in the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds is not as clear as it should be, and the bonds authorized are disadvantageous to the Government both as to the time of their maturity and rate of interest.

National Quarantine.

The admonitions of the last two years touching our public health, and the demonstrated danger of the introduction of contagious diseases from foreign ports, has invested the subject of national quarantine with increased interest. A more general and harmonious system than now exists, acting promptly and directly everywhere, and constantly operating by preventive means to shield our country from the invasion of disease, and at the same time having due regard to the rights and duties of local agencies, would, I believe, add greatly to the safety of our people.

Peace Within Our Borders.

Neither Indian outbreaks nor domestic violence have called the army into service during the year, and the only active military duty required of it has been in the department of Texas, where violations of the neutrality laws of the United States and Mexico were promptly and efficiently dealt with by the troops, eliciting the warm approval of the civic and military authorities of both countries. The adoption of battalion formation for infantry regiments, the strengthening of the artillery forces, the abandonment of small and unnecessary posts, and the massing of the troops at important and accessible stations, all promise to promote the usefulness of the army. In the judgment of army officers, with but few exceptions, the operation of the law forbidding the re-enlistment of men after ten years of service has not proved its wisdom, and while the arguments that led to its adoption were not without merit, the experience of the year constrains me to join in the recommendation for its repeal.

Purchase of Silver.

The purchases of silver under the law of July 14, 1890, during the last fiscal year aggregated 54,008,162.59 fine ounces, which cost $45,531,374.53. The total amount of silver purchased from the time that tax became operative until the repeal of its purchasing clause on the 1st day of November, 1893, was 168,674,590.46 fine ounces, which cost $155,930,940.84. Between the 1st day of March, 1873, and the 1st day of November, 1893, the Government purchased under all laws 503,003,717 fine ounces of silver at a cost of $516,622,948. The silver dollars that have been coined under the act of July 14, 1890, number 36,087,285. The seigniorage arising from such coinage was $6,977,098.39, leaving on hand in the mints 140,699,760 fine ounces of silver, which cost $126,758,218.

Our total coinage of all metals during the last fiscal year consisted of 97,280,875 pieces, valued at $43,685,178.80, of which there was $30,038,140 in gold coin, $5,343,715 in silver dollars, $7,217,220.90 in subsidiary silver coins, and $1,086,102.90 in minor coins.

During the calendar year 1892 the productions of precious metals in the United States was estimated to be 1,596,375 fine ounces of gold of the commercial and coinage value of $33,000,000 and 58,000,000 mine ounces of silver of the bullion or market value of $50,750,000 and of the coinage value of $74,989,900. It is estimated that on July 1, 1893, the metallic stock of money in the United States, consisting of coin and bullion, amounted to $1,213,559,169, of which $597,697,685 was gold and $615,861,484 was silver.

One hundred and nineteen national banks were organized during the year ending Oct. 31, 1893, with a capital of $11,230,000. Forty-six went into voluntary liquidation and 158 suspended. Sixty-five of the suspended banks were insolvent, eighty-six resumed business and seven remained in the hands of bank examiners, with prospects of speedy resumption. Of the new banks organized forty-four were located in the Eastern States, forty-one west of the Mississippi River, and thirty-four in the Central and Southern States. The total number of national banks in existence on the 31st day of October, 1893, was 3,796, having an aggregate capital of $695,558,120. The net increase in the circulation of these banks during the year was $36,886,972.

The recent repeal of the provision of law requiring the purchase of silver bullion by the Government as a feature of our monetary scheme, has made an entire change in the complexion of our currency affairs. I do not doubt that the ultimate result of this action will be most salutary and far-reaching. In the nature of things, however, it is impossible to know at this time precisely what conditions will be brought about by the change, or what, if any, supplementary legislation may, in the light of such conditions, appear to be essential or expedient. Of course, after the recent financial perturbation, time is necessary for the re-establishment of business confidence. When, however, through this restored confidence, the money which has been frightened into hoarding-places is returned to trade and enterprise, a survey of the situation will probably disclose a safe path leading to a permanently sound currency, abundantly sufficient to meet every requirement of our increasing population and business. In the pursuit of this objects we should resolutely turn away from alluring and temporary expedients, determined to be content with nothing less than a lasting and comprehensive financial plan. In these circumstances I am convinced that a reasonable delay in dealing with this subject, instead of being injurious, will increase the probability of wise action.

Sea Coasts Defenses.

It is gratifying to note that we have begun to attain complete results in the comprehensive scheme of sea coast defense and fortification, entered upon eight years ago. At the end of the current calendar year the War Department will have nine 12-inch, twenty 10-inch and thirty-four 8-inch guns ready to be mounted on gun-lifts, and carriage, and seventy-five 12-inch mortars. The manufacture of heavy ordnance keeps pace with current needs; but to render these guns available for the purposes they are designed to meet, emplacements must be prepared for them.

After much preliminary work and much exhaustive examination in accordance with the requirements of the law, the board appointed to select a magazine rifle of modern type with which to replace the obsolete Springfield rifle of the infantry service, completed its labors during the last year and the work of manufacturing is now in progress at the National Armory at Springfield. It is confidently expected that by the end of the current year our infantry will be supplied with a weapon equal to that of the most progressive armies of the world.

Postoffice Department.

The report of the Postmaster General contains a detailed statement of the operations of the Postoffice Department during the last fiscal year and much interesting information touching this important branch of the public service. At a date when better times were anticipated it was estimated by his predecessor that the deficiency on the 30th day of June, 1893, would be but a little over a million and a half dollars. It amounted, however, to more than five millions. At the same time, and under the influence of like anticipations, estimates were made for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, which exhibited a surplus of revenue over expenditures of $872,245.71; but now, in view of the actual receipts and expenditures during that part of the current fiscal year already expired, the present Postmaster General estimates that at its close, instead of a surplus, there will be a deficiency of nearly eight million dollars.

Forty-two free delivery offices were added during the year to those already existing, making a total of 610 cities and towns provided with free delivery on June 30, 1893. Ninety-three other cities and towns are now entitled to this service under the law, but it has not been accorded them on account of insufficient funds to meet the expense of its establishment. I am decidedly of the opinion that the provisions of the present law permit as general an introduction of this feature of mail service as is necessary or justifiable, and that it ought not to be extended to smaller communities than are now designated. The expense of free delivery for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, will be more than $11,000,000, and, under legislation now existing, there must be a constant increase in this item of expenditure. During the year 195 internal money-order offices were added to those already provided, making a total of 2,408 in operation on June 30, 1893. The number of international money orders issued during the year was 1,055,999, an increase over the preceding year of 72,525, and their value was $16,341,837.86, an increase of $1,221,506.31. The number of orders paid was 300,917, an increase over the preceding year of 13,504, and their value was $5,283,375.70, an increase of $94,094.83.

From the foregoing statements it appears that the total issue of money orders and postal notes for the year amounted to $156,321,348.24. The number of letters and packages mailed during the year for special delivery was 3,375,693, an increase over the preceding year of nearly 22 per cent. The special delivery stamps used upon these letters and packages amounted to $337,569.30 and the messengers' fees paid for their delivery amounted to $256,596.71, leaving a profit to the Government of $80,976.59.

I desire to commend as especially worthy of prompt attention the suggestions of the Postmaster General relating to a more sensible and business-like organization and a better distribution of responsibility in his department.

Navy Department.

During the past six months the demands for cruising vessels have been many and urgent. Progress in the construction of new vessels has not been as rapid as was anticipated. There have been delays in the completion of unarmored vessels, but for the most part they have been such as are constantly occurring even in countries having the largest experience in naval ship-building. The most serious delays, however, have been in the work upon armored ships. The trouble has been the failure of contractors to deliver armor as agreed. The difficulties seem now, however, to have been all overcome, and armor is being delivered with satisfactory promptness. The Secretary of the Navy recommends the authorization of at least one battleship and six torpedo boats. While I am distinctly in favor of consistently pursuing the policy we have inaugurated of building up a thorough and efficient navy, I can not refrain from the suggestion that the Congress should carefully take into account the number of unfinished vessels on our hands and the depleted condition of our Treasury in considering the propriety of an appropriation at this time to begin new work.

On the Pension Rolls.

On the 30th day of June, 1893, there were on the pension rolls 966,012 names, an increase of 89,944 over the number on the rolls June 30, 1892. Of these there were 17 widows and daughters of revolutionary soldiers, 86 survivors of the war of 1812, 5,425 widows of soldiers of that war, 21,518 survivors and widows of the Mexican war, 3,882 survivors and widows of Indian wars, 284 army nurses, and 475,645 survivors and widows and children of deceased soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion. The latter number represents those pensioned on account of disabilities or death resulting from army and navy service. The number of persons remaining on the rolls June 30, 1893, who were pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, which allows pensions on account of death and disability not chargeable to any service, was 459,155. The number added to the rolls during the year was 123,634 and the number dropped was 33,690. The first payments on pensions allowed during the year amounted to $33,756,549.98. This includes arrears or the accumulation between the time from which the allowance of the pension dates and the time of actually granting the certificate. Although the law of 1890 permits pensions for disabilities not related to military service, yet, as a requisite to its benefits, a disability must exist incapacitating applicants "from the performance of manual labor to such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support." The execution of this law in its early stages does not seem to have been in accord with its true intention; but toward the close of the last administration an authoritative construction was given to the statute, and since that time this construction has been followed. This has had the effect of limiting the operations of the law to its intended purpose.

The discovery having been made that many names have been put upon the pension roll by means of wholesale and gigantic frauds, the Commissioner suspended payments upon a number of pensions which seemed to be fraudulent or unauthorized pending a complete examination, giving notice to the pensioners in order that they might have an opportunity to establish, if possible, the justice of their claims, notwithstanding apparent invalidity. This, I understand, is the practice which has for a long time prevailed in the Pension Bureau. But after entering upon these recent investigations, the Commissioner modified this rule so as not to allow, until after complete examination, interference with the payment of a pension apparently not altogether void, but which merely had been fixed at a rate higher than that authorized by law. I am unable to understand why frauds in the pension rolls should not be exposed and corrected with thoroughness and vigor. Every name fraudulently put upon these rolls is a wicked imposition upon the kindly sentiment in which pensions have their origin. Every fraudulent pensioner has become a bad citizen; every false oath in support of a pension has made perjury more common, and false and undeserving pensioners rob the people not only of their money, but of the patriotic sentiment which the survivors of a war, fought for the preservation of the Union, ought to inspire. Thousands of neighborhoods have their well-known fraudulent pensioners, and recent developments by the bureau establish appalling conspiracies to accomplish pension frauds. By no means the least wrong done is to brave and deserving pensioners, who certainly ought not to be condemned to such association. Those who attempt, in the line of duty, to rectify these wrongs, should not be accused of enmity or indifference to the claims of honest veterans. The sum expended on account of pensions for the year ending June 30, 1893, was $156,740,467.14. The Commissioner estimates that $165,000,000 will be required to pay pensions during the year ending June, 30, 1894.

Indians and Their Fate.

I am sure that secular education and moral and religious teaching must be important factors in any effort to save the Indian and lead him to civilization. I believe, too, that the relinquishment of tribal relations and the holding of land in severalty may, in favorable conditions, aid this consummation. It seems to me, however, that allotments of land in severalty ought to be made with great care and circumspection. If hastily done, before the Indian knows its meaning, while yet he has little or no idea of tilling a farm and no conception of thrift, there is great danger that a reservation life in tribal relations may be exchanged for the pauperism of civilization, instead of its independence and elevation. The solution of the Indian problem depends very largely upon good administration. The personal fitness of agents and their adaptability to the peculiarities of caring for their wards is of the utmost importance. There is danger of great abuses creeping into the prosecution of claims for Indian depredations, and I recommend that every possible safeguard be provided against the enforcement of unjust and fictitious claims of this description.

The Public Domain.

The vast area of land which but a short time ago constituted the public domain is rapidly falling into private hands. It is certain that in the transfer the beneficent purpose of the Government to supply from its domain homes to the industrious and worthy homeseekers is often frustrated. I concur with the Secretary in the belief that these outrages can not be entirely prevented without a change in the laws on the subject, and I hope his recommendations in that direction will be favorably considered. I especially commend to the attention of the Congress the statements contained in the Secretary's report concerning forestry.

Department of Justice.

The report of the Attorney General contains the usual summary of the affairs and proceedings of the Department of Justice for the past year, together with certain recommendations as to needed legislation on various subjects. I can not too heartily indorse the proposition that the fee system as applicable to the compensation of United States Attorneys, Marshals, Clerks of Federal Courts, and United States Commissioners, should be abolished with as little delay as possible. In my first message to Congress, dated December 8, 1885, I strongly recommended these changes and referred somewhat at length to the evils of the present system. Since that time the criminal business of the present Federal courts and the expenses attending it have enormously increased. It is therefore apparent that the reasons given in 1885 for a change in the manner of enforcing the Federal criminal law, have gained cogency and strength by lapse of time.

I also heartily join the Attorney General in recommending legislation fixing degrees of the crime of murder within Federal jurisdiction, as has been done in many of the States; authorizing writs of error on behalf of the Government in cases where final judgment is rendered against the sufficiency of an indictment or against the Government upon any other question arising before actual trial; limiting the right of review in cases of felony punishable only by fine and imprisonment to the Circuit Court of Appeals, and making speedy provision for the construction of such prisons and reformatories as may be necessary for the confinement of United States convicts.

Department of Agriculture.

The report of the Secretary of Agriculture will be found exceedingly interesting. During the first quarter of the present year the expenses of the department aggregated $345,876.76 as against $402,012.42 for the corresponding period of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893. The Secretary makes apparent his intention to continue this rate of reduction by submitting estimates for the next fiscal year less by $994,280 than those for the present year. The regulations of 1892 concerning Texas fever have been enforced during the last year. While contagious pleuro-pneumonia in cattle has been eradicated and animal tuberculosis—a disease widespread and more dangerous to human life than pleuro-pneumonia—is still prevalent, investigations have been made during the past year as to the means of its communication and the method of its correct diagnosis. Much progress has been made in this direction by the studies of the division of animal pathology, but the work ought to be extended in co-operation with local authorities, until the danger to human life arising from this cause is reduced to a minimum.

I join the Secretary in recommending that hereafter each applicant for the position of Inspector or Assistant Inspector in the Bureau of Animal Industry be required, as a condition precedent to his appointment, to exhibit to the United States Civil Service Commission his diploma from an established, regular and reputable veterinary college, and that this be supplemented by such an examination in veterinary science as the commission may prescribe.

Economy in Seeds.

In the year 1863 Congress appropriated $1,000, to be taken from the Patent Office funds for the purpose of collecting and distributing rare and improved varieties of seeds and for prosecuting agricultural investigations and procuring agricultural statistics. From this small beginning the seed division of the Department of Agriculture has grown to its present unwieldy and unjustifiably extravagant proportions. During the last fiscal year the cost of seeds purchased was $66,548.61. The remainder of an appropriation of $135,000 was expended in putting them up and distributing them. It surely never could have entered the minds of those who first sanctioned appropriations of public money for the purchase of new and improved varieties of seeds for gratuitous distribution that from this would grow large appropriations for the purchase and distribution, by members of Congress, of ordinary seeds, bulbs, and cuttings which are common in all the States and Territories, and everywhere easily obtainable at low prices. In view of these facts, this enormous expenditure without legitimate returns of benefit ought to be abolished.

Civil Service Reform.

The continued intelligent execution of the Civil Service law and the increasing approval by the people of its operation are most gratifying. The recent extension of its limitations and regulations to the employes at free delivery postoffices, which has been honestly and promptly accomplished by the Commission, with the hearty co-operation of the Postmaster General, is an immensely important advance in the usefulness of the system. I am, if possible, more than ever convinced of the incalculable benefits conferred by the civil service law, not only in its effect upon the public service but also, what is more important, in its effect in elevating the tone of political life generally.

Time to Cut Appropriations.

Economy in public expenditures is a duty that cannot be innocently neglected by those intrusted with the control of money drawn from the people for public uses. It must be confessed that our apparently endless resources, the familiarity of our people with immense accumulations of wealth, the growing sentiment among them that the expenditure of public money should in some manner be to their immediate and personal advantage, the indirect and almost stealthy manner in which a large part of our taxes is exacted, and a degenerated sense of official accountability, have led to growing extravagance in governmental appropriations. At this time when a depleted public Treasury confronts us, when many of our people are engaged in a hard struggle for the necessaries of life, and when enforced economy is pressing upon the great mass of our countrymen, I desire to urge, with all the earnestness at my command, that Congressional legislation be so limited by such strict economy as to exhibit an appreciation of the condition of the treasury and a sympathy with the straitened circumstances of our fellow-citizens. The duty of public economy is also of immense importance in its intimate and necessary relation to the task now in hand, of providing revenue to meet governmental expenditures and yet reducing the people's burden of Federal taxation.

The Promise of Tariff Reform.

After a hard struggle, tariff reform is directly before us. Nothing so important claims our attention, and nothing so clearly presents itself as both an opportunity and a duty—an opportunity to deserve the gratitude of our fellow-citizens, and a duty imposed upon us by our oft-repeated professions and by the emphatic mandate of the people. After full discussion our countrymen have spoken in favor of this reform, and they have confided the work of its accomplishment to the hands of those who are solemnly pledged to it. If there is anything in the theory of a representation in public places of the people and their desires, if public officers are really the servants of the people, and if political promises and professions have any binding force, our failure to give the relief so long awaited will be sheer recreancy. Nothing should intervene to distract our attention or disturb our effort until this reform is accomplished by wise and careful legislation. While we should stanchly adhere to the principle that only the necessity of revenue justifies the imposition of tariff duties and other Federal taxation, and that they should be limited by strict economy, we can not close our eyes to the fact that conditions have grown which, in justness and fairness, call for discriminating care in the discrimination of such duties and taxation as the emergencies of our Government actually demand.

Manifestly, if we are to aid the people directly through tariff reform, one of its most obvious features should be a reduction in present tariff charges upon the necessaries of life. The benefits of such a reduction would be palpable and substantial, seen and felt by thousands who would be better fed, and better clothed, and better sheltered. These gifts should be the willing benefactions of a Government whose highest function is the promotion of the welfare of the people.

Not less closely related to our people's prosperity and well-being is the removal of restrictions upon the importations of the raw materials necessary to our manufacturers. The world should be open to our national ingenuity and enterprise. This can not be while Federal legislation, through the imposition of high tariff, forbids to American manufacturers as cheap materials as those used by their competitors. It is quite obvious that the enhancement of the price of our manufactured products, resulting from this policy, not only confines the market for these products within our own borders, to the direct disadvantage of our manufacturers, but also increases their cost to our citizens. The interests of labor are certainly, though indirectly, involved in this feature of our tariff system. The sharp competition and active struggle among our manufacturers to supply the limited demand for their goods, soon fill the narrow market to which they are confined. Then follows a suspension of work in the mills and factories, a discharge of employes, and distress in the homes of our workingmen. Even if the often disproved assertion could be made good that a lower rate of wages would result from free raw materials and low tariff duties, the intelligence of our workingmen leads them quickly to discover that their steady employment, permitted by free raw materials, is the most important factor in their relation to tariff legislation.

A measure has been prepared by the appropriate Congressional committee embodying tariff reform on the lines herein suggested which will be promptly submitted for legislative action. It is the result of much patriotic and unselfish work, and I believe it deals with its subject consistently and as thoroughly as existing conditions permit. I am satisfied that the reduced tariff duties provided for in the proposed legislation, added to the existing internal-revenue taxation, will, in the near future, though perhaps not immediately, produce sufficient revenue to meet the needs of the Government.

Additional Internal Revenue Taxes.

The committee after full consideration, and to provide against a temporary deficiency which may exist before the business of the country adjusts itself to the new tariff schedules, have wisely embraced in their plan a few additional internal revenue taxes, including a small tax upon incomes derived from certain corporate investments. These new assessments are not only absolutely just and easily borne but they have the further merit of being such as can be remitted without unfavorable business disturbance whenever the necessity of the imposition no longer exists. In my great desire for the success of this measure I can not restrain the suggestion that its success can only be attained by means of unselfish counsel on the part of the friends of tariff reform, and as a result of their willingness to subordinate personal desires and ambitions to the general good. The local interests affected by the proposed reform are so numerous and so varied that if all are insisted upon the legislation embodying the reform must inevitably fail.

In conclusion, my intense feeling of responsibility impels me to invoke for the manifold interests of a generous and confiding people the most scrupulous care, and to pledge my willing support to every legislative effort for the advancement of the greatness and prosperity of our beloved country.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

News from Cuba indicates that the financial depression has seriously interfered with business in the ever-faithful isle. The revolution industry is especially depressed. Heretofore it has been considered necessary, in order to start a respectable revolution, to secure the adherence of at least a hundred men. A revolutionary army of this size was not, it is true, considered exactly up to concert pitch, because not more than seventy-five of the hundred patriots could be brigadier generals. There had to be some privates. Still it made a fair showing and usually lasted twenty-four hours at least. With the hard times, however, Cuban patriots have been marking down figures and getting up a sort of bargain counter revolution. The minimum was reached when a serried host of twenty-five men undertook to overturn the government and set up the standard of the republic. Of course, the government troops, after getting out a search warrant, crushed the insurrection, and the Queen of the Antilles again languishes beneath the heel of despotism. The usual daily revolutions will continue to take place, however, as advertised, so long as three men and a boy are left to let slip the dogs of war.

Wife-beater Kline, of Toledo, has received his just deserts. It was his custom to amuse himself by using Mrs. Kline as a football, kicking her all over the house. After being knocked down repeatedly, the woman turned on her tormenter and shot him with his own revolver. He will probably die. At all events, he will not beat any more women for some time to come. It is to be hoped that other women, cursed with brutal husbands, will follow the example of Mrs. Kline. There has been an unpleasant monotony about these conjugal killings, the woman being invariably the victim. The Toledo incident may have the effect of evening up matters by encouraging the killing of a few wife-beaters.

Pennsylvania Guardian: The World's Fair was a triumphant monument to the vast resources of the Yankee, an achievement which has dwarfed by comparison any other exhibition ever given under the sun. A Hospital Car for Immigrants.

A hospital car, to be run in connection with every emigrant train and in case of the discovery of contagious disease to be switched off and isolated, is a needed improvement which is being urged by Eastern health officials. The Baltimore and Ohio, which carries a large immigrant traffic, is favorable to the plan and the other trunk lines will doubtless also adopt it. The attention which has been directed by the National Association of Railway Surgeons and by other bodies of medical men to the subject of the proper and safe transportation of the sick has been of much value to the public and the railways, and the additional safeguard that would be afforded by a car in which sick immigrants could be separated from the well and properly treated should not be neglected.—Railway Age.

A Fortunate Accident.

To break a mirror is considered unlucky by the superstitious. However, it was a very lucky accident in the case of a certain Mr. Roll of Newark. The mirror had been given him by his grandfather. One day, to his great consternation he shivered it to atoms, whereupon an old yellow parchment fell out from between the glass and the frame. This turned out to be a document for which Mr. Roll had been vainly hunting for years, and which proved his right to a large piece of land near New York, valued at six million dollars. As there were nearly a hundred persons seeking to establish their claims to the estate, the sensation caused by the lucky find may be easily imagined. The story reads like a romance, but it is true, nevertheless.

Troubles Threatening the Kidneys.

Although they are grievous and very often fatal if disregarded, may be prevented by a timely resort to that admirable safeguard of health, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a genial promoter of activity in the renal organs, the stomach and the liver. Ere inaction of the kidneys develops into Bright's disease, diabetes, or other dangerous disorders, recourse should be had to the Bitters. If this suggestion is followed, the happiest outcome of the earlier symptoms may be anticipated with confidence. Check a development of these maladies at the outset by the means indicated, since at their maturity they are hard indeed to conquer. Dyspepsia, rheumatism insomnia, nervousness, constipation, malarial complaints are eradicated by the Bitters, a medicine of comprehensive use and prompt effects.

An Incomplete Offering.

The late Sultan Burghash had a very savage chained lion, and, as a happy thought, offered it to Sir John Kirk, then British Consul-General at Constantinople, reminding him that the lion formed one of the supporters of the royal arms above the gate of the British Consulate, and that the presence of the real brute would, therefore, be highly appropriate. "I am sure that your highness would never make an incomplete present," he replied, "and when you are able to accompany the lion with a unicorn I shall be delighted to receive your munificent offer."

WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N.Y.:

Gentlemen—A heart overflowing with gratitude prompts me, to write you. Twelve long weary years I suffered greatly, from Uterine Derangement and at last was given up by my physician to die, besides spending almost all we had. After five months' treatment with your Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription, I now enjoy most excellent health. I would, to day, have been in my grave, and my little children motherless, had it not been for you and your medicine. I will recommend your medicine as long as I live.

TO TAX THE INCOMES.

MR. SHEARMAN'S VERY ATTRACTIVE SYSTEM.

He Would Tax All Incomes from Rents and from Corporations Having Exclusive and Monopolistic Privileges—New Steel Trust—Insincere McKinley.

A Commendable System.

The agitation for an income tax to splice out and supplement our tariff and internal revenue system has made great headway during the past two months. Such a tax would be very popular with the masses, upon whom the burdens of government rest most heavily; and it is not so certain that it would be unpopular with the rich, who are now practically exempt from taxation for national purposes. In fact, many of them, recognizing the justice of such a system, have declared in its favor. The arguments against an income tax are extremely weak and childish—especially when considered in connection with the fact that without this tax duties must be put upon sugar and perhaps also upon tea and coffee.

Not only is an income tax needed to prevent a deficit during the first two years of a new tariff but it is needed as a permanent supplement to our present system of indirect taxation—that is, of taxes on consumption. Rates of indirect taxation cannot be changed to meet requirements for revenue without seriously distubing business. Rates of income taxation can be changed, to preserve an equilibrium between revenue and expenditures, without affecting business interests. It is maintained for this purpose in several European countries—notably in Great Britain.

The only objection to an income tax worthy of consideration, at the present time, is that it will be likely to fall mainly upon the honest and the helpless—those who will not or cannot lie their way out from under it. It is mainly to escape from this objection that Mr. Thomas G. Shearman has written a series of articles, printed in the New York World, on a "Just and Collectable Income Tax." After showing the necessity for a direct tax, and noting that no other direct tax is available (except perhaps one on succession), he proceeds to consider the kind of an income tax that should be adopted.

He objects to a graduated income tax because it would open many unnecessary avenues to fraud, and because "it would be a complete failure as appiled to dividends and interest paid by corporations." He objects to any system which depends for collection upon "private individual returns from the taxpayers." Experience shows that it leads to a "carnival of fraud, perjury and blackmail." He concludes that the only incomes which can be ascertained correctly are those "received under circumstances which enable others than the income receiver to know precisely how much he receives." He finds that "all incomes derived from dividends on the stock or interest on the bonds of corporations, or from the rent of land and houses, can be fully ascertained and fairly taxed." He cites our own experience and that of Great Britain to show that a vast revenue could be obtained from these two sources of income. He, however, thinks it unnecessary to tax incomes from corporations unless such incomes partake of the nature of rent. This would "include all dividends and interest paid by railroad companies, telegraph companies, telephone companies, pipe line companies, mines, quarries, gas companies, electric light companies, steam heating companies, and in short all corporations having exclusive privileges of any kind. In other words, we should tax all the income which is derived from monopolies, whether natural or artificial.

"It is not only fair and just that the government should tax every species of monopoly or exclusive franchise; it is a crying shame that such incomes are not now and always taxed. These are in fact the only kinds of property which ought to be taxed, because they are the only valuable things which men do not create by their own industry. The government creates and gives away these franchises. True, it is necessary that it should do so; but none the less it ought to collect just as much of its revenue as possible from this source before demanding any from people who have received no favor from the government and have earned every dollar of their income by their independent labor. The principle, in short, which I propose is that monopolies in every form, including exclusive franchises, patent rights and every other form of special privileges, no matter how widely extended, should be subjected to the income tax, and that this tax should not be assessed upon and collected from the people who pay to the beneficiaries of such monopolies the income derived therefrom.

Speedy Settlement Demanded.

The woolen manufacturing interests of the country, and in fact all commercial interests, are demanding a thoughtful, conservative, but speedy and conclusive settlement of the tariff, that business may thus be afforded additional relief, and that the perplexity and uncertainty which still overshadows the country may, in a large measure at least, be dispelled. The constant agitation of this subject of tariff revision, the uncertainty owing to threatened changes, either for lower or higher duties, has hung like the sword of Damocles over our politics-ridden business community until the over-indulgent people of this country are beginning to realize that the commercial welfare of the country should not be imperiled by making the tariff a matter of party politics with the incoming of each succeeding administration.

The questions involved require investigation by fair and impartial minds; they are not matters of party politics, but broad, economic problems affecting people of every political creed and the welfare of the whole country. They should therefore be handled in a thoroughly dispassionate manner and by men of strong character.

While it is probable that this bill as reported by the Ways and Means Committee will not become a law without modifications, it is sincerely hoped that when the measure is presented no dilatory or filibustering tactics will be employed to obstruct legislation, for if this can be evaded there appears no good reason why the bill should not pass both houses of Congress as early as February.—American Wool and Cotton Reporter.

Warner's Tariff Bill.

Probably no bill that has gone into the hands of the Ways and Means Committee will contain more excellent features than the one introduced by Congressman Warner of New York, and ordered to be printed by the committee. The bill is brief, clear and easily understood; it is, with slight changes, the Reform Club's proposed tariff bill wrought into shape for legislative action; it is in principle similar to the Walker tariff of 1846, which silenced all opposition. It contains only ad valorem duties; it is planned to produce revenue and not to grant special favors to any industry; its free list is large, and embraces all raw materials, including sugars of all kinds; it places duties of from 30 to 50 per cent. on luxuries; its 25 per cent. schedule includes woolens, glass, gloves, earthenware, nearly all manufactures of metals, manufactures of cotton, linen, and furs; it regards the consumer as more important than the manufacturer, though with free raw materials no industry worth saving will leave the country when protected from foreign competition by a duty of 25 per cent.; it would make work more plentiful and lower the cost of living; its good effects would be so marked that it would become popular with laborers and housewives; it would guarantee a Democratic administration for the rest of this century.

Insincere McKinley.

Gov. McKinley gave new proof before the Home Market Club of Boston that he is one of the most disingenuous, not to say dishonest, public speakers in the country. He pleaded for stability in the tariff as a condition of certainty in business calculations, although the high protectionists have tinkered the tariff twenty times in thirty years. He argued that "free trade"—meaning a freer trade—"cannot increase our production at home," and said that nobody advocates it with any such view. The truth is, and McKinley has heard it a thousand times, that tariff reduction is advocated for precisely this reason. The best way to increase our production at home is to cheapen raw materials and extend our markets. The Governor bewailed, with his most sanctimonious air, the lack of confidence, when unmistakable signs of restored confidence are seen on every side. He had the assurance to deny that the people voted against McKinleyism in 1890 and 1892, though this was everywhere the main issue in the canvass. Gov. McKinley has a very low opinion of the intelligence of the people.

The New Steel Trust.

The great steelmakers have formed a new trust. The breaking up of the old one was followed by a natural fall in the price of steel rails. For many months the old trust maintained the price at $29 a ton, notwithstanding the fact that there was no demand for its product. In other words, the tariff maintained the price when it would naturally fall. As soon as the trust went to pieces the price did fall to below $22. The new trust, so it is announced, has fixed the price at $24. This price could not be obtained if it were not for a tariff duty that is high enough to give the trust control of the market and the opportunity to tax consumers. Every one who is affected by the cost of transportation is interested in the tax on rails. It is a burden not only on the railroads, but on the farmers whose grains are carried to market by rail. Under the McKinley tariff the new trust is making at least 20 per cent. profit.

Tax the Big Incomes.

IN justice to the masses the rich cannot be allowed to longer escape a reasonable proportion of Federal taxation. The income tax will come to stay.—St. Louis Republic.

THE income tax will be met, when it is announced next week, by a universal condemnation in the East; but it will not be reported to please the East.—Philadelphia Press.

THE majority of Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee are firm in support of such a proposition, and it probably will be incorporated in a separate bill.—Yonkers Statesman.

WE presume there will be a great outcry against this tax, as the people who will be called on to pay it are of a class who have a great deal of influence in molding public opinion. But when it is fully understood we think it will be a popular tax with the great mass of the people.—Pittsburg Post.

THE income tax that was imposed by a Republican administration in war times was a very different sort of thing from what the Democrats propose. The war tax reached all classes. The one now proposed is calculated to reach only those who are rich and who do not now pay a fair, just and proportionate amount of Federal taxation.—Freeman's Journal.

Death from a Sedlitz Powder.

A sedlitz powder as the cause of death is an almost unheard-of thing in medical circles, yet Christine Kroys, a German domestic, of Brooklyn, perished by that means a few days ago. She was found by her mistress lying unconscious on the floor, her lips covered with blood. All efforts to resuscitate her proved vain, and she died within a few hours. On a table near by were found two glasses, in which the blue and white papers of a sedlitz powder had been dissolved. Apparently the girl had drunk first one glass and then the other. The two packages, when mixed together, effervesce and generate carbonic gas. This was formed in the girl's stomach and choked her. While endeavoring to gain her breath, she burst an artery which caused her death.

The Tragedy of Life in New York.

Could anything be more pathetic than the story of 11-year-old Sanford Parker rushing out of the miserable Brooklyn tenement house the other day to earn a few pennies wherewith to buy food for his starving mother, rendered helpless by dropsy? Poor boy! He could earn no pennies, and in desperation stole the brass handle of a trolley motor, hoping to sell it to a junkman, and thus procure money to buy food. But he was nabbed by a policeman, and locked up in a station house. Meanwhile the poor mother died of starvation. Is there any worse destitution than this in the most wretched of London's slums?

A Curiosity of Nature.

There is a very curious plant to be found growing in the vicinity of Oroville, Cal. The fruit is yellow and a little larger than an egg, and appears like an empty bag rather than a solid, though it contains a watery substance which evaporates or dries up when the fruit is fully ripe, leaving a sort of gas inside the fruit which is lighter than air. The inflated, bag-like fruit flips back and forth in the wind until it finally breaks loose from its slender stem, sails up into the air, rising 100 or more feet, and finally disappearing over the hill.

Bad Season for Peanuts.

The merchants of Norfolk say that this season has been the slowest for the peanut market that they have had for years. Thousands of bushels of stock are stored, with no demand, and it is only a few weeks before the new crop will be ready for the market.

Old Playmates.

The author of "Modern Hunting," in La Nouvelle Revue, tells a pleasing story of one of the oldest and most celebrated sportsmen of France, the Prince de Joinville. The Prince is perhaps the "senior member" of hunting society in his country. He was hunting in the Chantilly forest, as the guest of the Duc d'Aumale.

His party met another party which was following a deer in the same forest, and some disorder resulted. The Prince lost track of the animal that he was following, but he took the disappointment philosophically, and set out to find the deer again.

On the way he was stopped by an old white-haired peasant, who told him that the deer he was following had passed by there recently. The son of Louis Philippe asked some simple question, but as the old peasant replied he looked at him keenly, seeming to pay more attention to him than to his words. Suddenly he stopped him.

"Wait! it seems to me that I know you, friend!" he exclaimed.

"Yes sir," replied the peasant, in his old cracked voice, which shook a little with emotion. "Oh, yes, we have often eaten cakes at 'Auntie Adelaide's.'"

It was sixty years since they had been children together, but the varied experiences of that time had not made the Prince forget his old playmate and servitor, and he delayed his quest for the lost deer to renew the acquaintance.

Startled the Engineer.

A cruel joke was perpetrated on the engineer of the Louisville and Nashville passenger train which reached this city late yesterday afternoon, says the Louisville Courier-Journal. Several miles from the city the engineer was horrified to see what appeared to be the form of a man asleep on the track a short distance ahead.

He frantically applied the air-brakes and blew the whistle in short, quick jerks, in the hopes of awakening the sleeping man. Immediately heads began to pop out of the car windows, and as the supposed man in front was seen upon the track they were quickly jerked back to escape seeing the sickening accident, which it appeared could not be averted. As the engine passed over the object the engineer and fireman closed their eyes and fancied they could feel the wheels pass over the body.

When the train was finally stopped passengers and trainmen hurried back to the spot, where the dark object could still be seen, but now cut into several pieces. A search was already started for a doctor, when it was discovered that the mutilated remains were those of a dummy, with a pumpkin for a head. The figure had on a complete suit of cloths, and at a distance had a most natural appearance. The men returned, much disgusted, but greatly relieved, to the train.

Won by Praise.

Doctor Johnson was very susceptible to flattery. Gilbert Stuart, the American portrait painter, learned his art in the English home of Benjamin West. One day he met Doctor Johnson, whose dislike for the American colonies was notorious. "Sir," demanded Johnson of young Stuart, "where did you learn English?" "Out of your dictionary, sir," replied the quick-witted artist. The old man became gentle. Doctor John Ewing, provost of the University of Pennsylvania, while visiting in London, dined with Doctor Johnson. He had been cautioned not to contradict the great men, and he saw from the silence that fell upon the company when Johnson entered the room that he was regarded as a literary despot, whose opinions were to be received and not criticized. Johnson attended to nothing but his plate, Having eaten voraciously he surveyed the guests for the first time. The conversation turned upon America, and Ewing defended the colonies, "What do you know, sir, on the subject?" exclaimed Johnson. "Sir," he thundered on, "what do you know in America? You never read books there." "Pardon me, sir," blandly replied Ewing. "We have read the 'Rambler.'" The compliment to the author pacified the enemy of the colonies.

The Passion Flower.

A great many lovers of flowers who have not made botanical lore and legend a study often ask themselves or some friend why the "passion flower" is so called, and not one time in a dozen is the correct answer given. It was so named by the first Spanish settlers in the new world because they imagined that they saw in it a representation of our Lord's passion. The filamentous processes are taken to represent the crown of thorns; the styles, the nails used in fastening the Savior to the cross; the anthers, the marks of the five wounds; the leaf, the spear that pierced his side; the tendrils, the cords or whips with which he was scourged; the column of the ovary, the upright of the cross; the stamens, the hammers; the calyx, the "glory" or halo; the white tint, purity; the blue tint, heaven.

"Calvary clover" is a still more wonderful representation of the crucifixion. In that flower persons of vivid imagination can see in the meanderings of the colors of the petals the outlines of a cross with the figure of a man stretched prone upon it.

GERMANY'S young war lord is blessed with true Teutonic thrift. He has now taken steps to have the milk produced on his farm at Potsdam sold in Berlin. Carts bearing his name are to be seen in the streets of the capital. The drivers of these vehicles retail milk to anyone who chooses to buy, and as it is of a good quality the sales are quite large. Of course the ultra-loyal members of the aristocracy prefer to patronize the royal milkman anyhow.

KIDDER—"Did it ever occur to you that in riding a bicycle you might be encouraging a certain form of gambling?" Ministerial Enthusiast—"Horrors, no! There's no gambling about a bicycle, is there?" Kidder—"Ain't, eh? I'd just like to know if it hasn't been a wheel of fortune to the makers?"—Buffalo Courier.

THE HIGHEST AWARD.

Royal Baking Powder Has All the Honors—In Strength and Value 20 Per Cent. Above Its Nearest Competitor.

The Royal Baking Powder has the enviable record of having received the highest award for articles of its class—greatest strength, purest ingredients, most perfectly combined—wherever exhibited in competition with others. In the exhibitions of former years, at the Centennial, at Paris, Vienna, and at the various State and Industrial fairs, where it has been exhibited, judges have invariably awarded the Royal Baking Powder the highest honors.

At the recent World's Fair the examinations for the baking powder awards were directed by the chief chemist of the Agricultural Department at Washington. The chief chemist's official report of the tests of the baking powders, which was made for the specific purpose of ascertaining which was the best, shows the leavening strength of the Royal to be 160 cubic inches of carbonic gas per ounce of powder. Of the cream of tartar baking powders exhibited, the next highest in strength tested contained but 133 cubic inches of leavening gas. The other powders gave an average of 111. The Royal, therefore, was found of 20 per cent. greater leavening strength than its nearest competitor, and 44 per cent. above the average of all the other tests. Its superiority in other respects, however, in the quality of the food it makes as to fineness, delicacy and wholesomeness, could not be measured by figures.

It is these high qualities, known and appreciated by the women of the country for so many years, that have caused the sales of the Royal Baking Powder, as shown by statistics, to exceed the sale of all other baking powders combined.

The Wine Fly.

It may be the "invisible spirit of wine," which Shakspeare speaks of, that materializes in the worm and subsequent fly, called the bibio, or wine fly. These worms are born in the sediment of wine, in empty casks and in drippings from wine vessels and presses. They grow for about seven weeks, and then enter into the nymph state. After about ten days their shell breaks, and the fly comes out. The insect is extremely small, when its wings are not extended, not exceeding the size of a pin's head. The breast and body are yellow, the reticulated eyes are red, and the wings possess all the colors of the rainbow. They prove very interesting to microscopists, and are found to have all the regular parts of common flies. Their antennae are oval and flatter, and their legs and every other part are perfectly formed.

Baby's Profession.

A Parisian stroller has picked up the following particulars of a conversation which passed in an emigration office. The father of a family presents himself and asks for tickets.

"How many are you?" asks the agent.

"Three—I, my wife and my child."

"Good; your age, your profession?"

"Thirty years, carpenter; my wife, twenty-four, needle-woman."

"The boy?" asks the agent.

"Seven months."

"His profession?"

The father's eyebrows formed gothic arches on his forehead.

"His profession, I say?" repeated the agent, angrily; "we have no time to lose."

The father reflects, and at last replies,—

"Bachelor!"

Ambiguous.

A New York clergyman, who was preaching in a neighboring village, astonished the congregation by saying: "I wish to return to New York by the first train, as I have a wife and five children there, and have never seen one of them." This declaration excited the most painful curiosity among the good people, which was allayed, however, when it became known that the "one" which the clergyman had never seen was one that had been born since he left home the day before.

The Difference.

One of the stories of the Midway Plaisance is of the mosque there, where prayers were said daily, at regular intervals, for the natives. A pious woman passing accosted a young Oriental and chatted with him, finishing with a nod toward his prayer-house and the remark: "I hope you go to church every Sunday, like a Christian." "No," was the quick reply; "I go every day, like a Turk."

Burial of a Pope.

With much pomp and befitting ceremony the remains of Pope Alexander V., who died in 1410 at Balogna, have at length been definitely entombed in a monumental crypt constructed at the expense of the present Pontiff in the Church of San Francisco at Balogna. This is the fifth time that the unfortunate Alexander V. has been moved since his demise.

Queer Pets.

An animal which makes a most agreeable pet, but is rarely tamed on account of its fur value, is the North American beaver. A well known Indian trader, some years ago, tamed several of these hard working fellows, so that they answered to their names and followed like a dog. In cold weather they were kept in the sitting room, and were constant companions of the women and children. When the Indians were absent for any great time the beavers showed great uneasiness, and on their return discovered equal signs of pleasure by fondling them, crawling into their laps, lying on their backs like a squirrel, and behaving like children in the presence of parents whom they seldom see. In their wild state beavers feed on bark and herbage chiefly, but in their case they feed for the most part on rice, plum pudding, partridge and venison, and they liked all of them extremely.

A Hardy Little Cactus.

There grows upon the sands of the Atlantic coast, at least as far north as the Virginia line, a little cactus with a pretty yellow flower. It flourishes in the driest seasons and where naught but bare sand is visible for many square yards. The secret of its sturdy growth amid hard conditions is found perhaps in the character of its roots. They are long and tough, like twine cords, and radiating in several directions they convey to the plant whatever moisture the ground contains for yards around. Oddly enough, too, this cactus, when torn up by the roots and conveyed north, seems to live on indefinitely under entirely new conditions, its roots cut short, planted in clay soil and abundantly watered.

What He Thought.

Down in South Carolina (said the Hon. W. J. Talbert of South Carolina, in a recent speech in the House), there was a man who hired a lawyer to conduct a case in court. As the lawyer was not talking exactly to suit him, he got up to make a few remarks himself. The Judge, of course, made him take his seat. He got up again, and the Judge made him take his seat again. A third and fourth time this happened, and, finally, the old farmer got up and said: "Well, Judge, if you won't let me talk, won't you let me think?" "Why, certainly," replied the Judge. "Well, Judge," he said, "I think you and all these lawyers are a set of d——d rascals."

Boarded by an Owl in Midocean.

A large and curious white owl held captive on board the Red Star line steamship Pennsylvania, which has just arrived from Antwerp, creates a great deal of interest among all having any business on board the ship, and has become quite a pet among the sailors. The strange visitor came on board the Pennsylvania Oct. 24, when about 1,400 miles off from the English coast. It flew into the rigging of the Pennsylvania early in the morning in an exhausted state, and had no doubt been carried off from the coast in a gale of wind.—Philadelphia Press.

"German Syrup"

JUDGE J. B. HILL, of the Superior Court, Walker county, Georgia, thinks enough of German Syrup to send us voluntarily a strong letter endorsing it. When men of rank and education thus use and recommend an article, what they say is worth the attention of the public. It is above suspicion. "I have used your German Syrup," he says, "for my Coughs and Colds on the Throat and Lungs. I can recommend it for them as a first-class medicine."—Take no substitute.

Little Dick—I know why little colored boys are so happy.

Little Don—Why?

Little Dick—'Cause their mothers can't tell when their hands are dirty.

Wonderful in Its Effects.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

There are a few cases of scarlet fever in Uniontown, otherwise it has been very healthy thus far.

George Morel, wife and little Harry and Mr. and Mr. Nill, of Auburn, ate turkey Thanksgiving with Phil Morel and wife.

Rev. U. S. A. Bridge went out to Barker's church Saturday to hold a series of meetings, when Tuesday a messenger was sent for him on account of the serious illness of one of his children.

A son of Robert Crooks, aged thirteen, died Saturday, Dec 2, having been out of health for some time. The funeral services were held at the Presbyterian church at 10 a. m., the Monday following, Rev. Fry officiating.

Saturday night, while people slept, nature's forces were at work silently but steadily, and when the sleepers looked out in the morning it was to find snow some over a foot in depth—such a fall as has not been seen here for many years.

Wednesday afternoon, the day before Thanksgiving, exercises were held in some of the school rooms in which the small folks were the actors. Those who were present think the children did credit to their teachers and themselves also.

The L. M. C. met Tuesday evening at the home of Miss Mattie Maxson. The following program was carried out: Responses, the Weather; The French and Indian War, leader—Miss Blair; Book review—Hawthorne's "Wonder Book," Mrs. Waterman; Reading—"The Indian Burying Ground," Mrs. Darby; Piano solo, Miss Maxson.

The DeKalb County Teachers' Association assembled in Waterloo last week, according to previous arrangement. The first meeting was held Thursday evening in the U. B. church, the session continuing during Friday and Saturday. The program was both interesting and profitable. The attendance was good, both of those from out of town, who took part or were otherwise specially interested, and the teachers in Waterloo and many others who went simply to enjoy the occasion.

GARRETT.

Lots of sickness.

Get ready for Christmas.

This looks like winter for sure.

The doctor has been lashed out in the cold.

Our merchants are receiving their holiday goods.

Drayman Hoiser is laid up with typhoid fever.

Charley Trost, of Ashley, was in the city Sunday.

Frank Getts, of Cromwell, was in the city last week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Webster visited at St. Joe last week.

Talk now that the B. & O. will begin to work a full force.

James Duncan, of Chicago Junction, was in the city Sunday.

We noticed Hon. D. D. Moody, of Auburn, in Garrett last week.

Harry Robbins, of Cromwell, was in town several days last week.

The thin turkey wears a smile now, but it will be his turn Christmas.

Mesdames Ella Vivian and J. G. Philbrick were at Chicago Friday and Saturday.

Sheriff Ralston and deputies were in the city last week subpœnaing witnesses for the Arnold trial at Angola.

L. J. Gengler has moved his law office into Frederick's store front and is "at home" to his friends.

Never before, since we can remember, in DeKalb county, have there been so many public sale. We counted 12 different notices in one day. This fact can not easily be accounted for.

A Garrett man has a new method of killing rats which is entirely original and he thinks of having a patent issued on it. He mixes two parts of flour and one of calcine. The rat eats its fill, the composition hardens, and the rat dies with his tombstone in his stomach.

Manager Wagner has made arrangements with that well-known and popular theater company, the Rileys, to appear in his opera house holiday week. The firemen give a dance Monday night and on this occasion the curtain will rise at 7 o'clock and go down at 9. After that the dance will follow. The fire boys always give a good dance, and if you want to see a first-class show and spend an enjoyable evening, you should make it a sure point to be there.

E. W. Miner & Son, of Hudson, have rented the Stickney building on the corner of King and Cowen streets and will begin the publication of the Garrett Republican. A great many people have spoken of starting a second newspaper here, but it all ended in talk. Some time ago a gentleman from Syracuse was looking over the ground, but he must not have been very favorably impressed. At any rate, he did not come. We can see no reason why Garrett should not support a second newspaper. Butler has two and Auburn three, and in both of these places all seem to be prospering. We were shown a copy of the Hudson World, Mr. Miner's old paper, and, in speaking of his new venture, he says: "The policy of the Garrett Republican will be to speak well or not at all of the people of Garrett and make the paper win friends with all classes. We will labor for all practical public improvements and the support of every public and private home enterprise. In return we ask a small support from every business man of the city." We have heard several of our prominent citizens express their opinion of the matter. Some think it will succeed; others say it will not. Time will tell. We welcome Miner & Son to our little city and hope they will prosper.

ST JOE.

James Gibford, of Concord, was in town Friday of last week.

J. W. Dills and wife spent Thanksgiving in Ft. Wayne the guests of Thomas Dills.

The new firm of Barney & White shipped a car load of lambs from this place last Friday.

Frank White drove down near Fort Wayne last Saturday, and bought 90 head of sheep of one man.

W. C Patterson and wife eat their Thanksgiving turky with the family of Warren Webster at Garrett.

J. M. Irwin and wife, John William and family eat Thanksgiving dinner with the family of Alvy Irvin, of Concord.

Frank Herrick, a former resident of this place, but now one of Allen county's thriving farmers was in town Saturday.

The children and grandchildren of the late Levi Sechler held a family reunion at the residence of Jacob Baltz in Spencerville last Thursday.

Rev. Joseph Scholes, of Corunna, whose parents are old residents of this place, preached at the Christian church last Wednesday night.

Sheriff Ralston was in town on last Wednesday with subpœnas for several parties to attend the trial of George Arnold, which takes place at Angola this week.

Rev. Jay O. Rose, of the Christian church has been holding a series of meetings at Coburntown for the past two weeks and has been the means of fifteen or twenty additions to the church at that place.

New Years eve is likely to be the event of the season. A concert by the Young Ladies Quartet, of St. Joe, will be given at the Lutheran church. The concert will be under the direction of C. A. Woodcox.

Ed. and J. I. White returned from their Michigan hunt last Thursday. We are told that J. I. succeeded in bagging three or four deer and one bear. When Jake don't get there its of no use for any one to try.

The series of meetings that have been going on at the M. P. church for the past three weeks are still to be continued for another week, Rev. Mr. Lineterry is in charge of the meeting and is having a deserved success.

Pete Draggoo, St. Joe's popular livery man, drove to Auburn Saturday evening and brought home Prof. Bonnell, Ed. Berry, Otto Widney and Clarence Woodcox, who had been attending the Teachers Association at Waterloo.

The principal of the St Joe schools, J. P. Bonnell, Miss Addie Widney primary, Bertha Hollabaugh of No. 5, and Clarence Woodcox, who is teaching at No. 11 attended the Teachers' Association at Waterloo last Friday and Saturday.

M. E. Olds, of the firm of the big 4, went to Cleveland on Thursday of last week for the purpose of loading up for the holiday trade. Mort has been in business in St. Joe for a number of years and no one knows better how to please the boys and girls than he.

EAST DEKALB COUNTY.

LAST WEEK.

Mrs. Sam. Easterday is recovering.

Lee Rinehart is visiting friends at Hudson.

Mr. Duebner has gone to Hudson to visit his son.

Charlie Wilson was visiting under the parental roof Sunday.

Rev. Brundiege, of Maysville, was the guest of Gus Rinehart.

Miss Imo Rhodes has recovered from a siege of typhoid fever.

Miss Minnie Swartz is the guest of the Misses Goldsmith this week.

Mrs. George May died Thursday a. m. and was buried in the Newville cemetery Sunday.

The Christian Endeavors of Newville, will give a social at the home of Henry Webster Saturday evening. A musical and literary program has been prepared. A cordial invitation to all. Mite five cts.

Sunday night about twelve o'clock the farm house owned by Frank Repp and occupied by Will Hollinger was seen by John Smith, a neighbor to be burning. The alarm was given and by prompt response of neighbors many household goods were saved. Origin of the fire unknown, as Mr. Hollinger's family were absent. A strange fatality has attended the house on this farm, as Mr. William Scoville when owner had two residences burn and one on Sunday, this making the third.

CONCORD.

Mrs. Ella High is reported better.

Fred Morr is able to be out again.

Eva May came home from Garrett Saturday.

G. W. Draggoo and Brent Phillips were in St. Joe Saturday.

George Swineford and wife were the guests of his parents in St. Joe Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs Phillips were the guests of C H Brown and wife of St. Joe Tuesday.

John Hull has a badly sprained back. He loves it though he was proud of the beautiful snow and its great depth.

Will Baker has trapped 10 minks and caught 14 coons. They and the thieves have been playing havoc among poultry.

Amos Sebert was first on deck with his snow rig. Tell Elson and D. W. Baker came next. D. W. runs a free bus from his house to the church.

GAS ADDITION.

Mr. and Mrs. Goodman are on the sick list.

Eld. H. A Croy is very sick with the grip at this writing.

Mr. and Mrs. Bolender have an 8½ pound boy, born Tuesday.

Mrs John Roberts has been very sick with lung fever, but is some better.

Elder Neal, who is holding a protracted at the Church of God, called on H. A. Croy last week.

H. A Croy helped in the meeting until he got down sick. They had good meetings and some conversions.

Ella Masters, who was quite sick of lung fever, is recovered. Her father, M. B Masters has also been quite sick of the same complaint, but is now somewhat improved.

Paid in November.

We are glad to be able to thank so many of our patrons for subscription during the month just past. They are:

Hats in the House of Commons.

The first thing that strikes the visitor to the House of Commons—here also it is exceptional among the legislatures of the world—is that the House of Commons permits its members to retain their hats during the sitting. Indeed, it is the rule to wear and the exception not to wear the hat. Mr. Gladstone never wears his hat—there have been exceptions, to one of which I will allude presently; nor did Mr. Smith, the late respected leader in the House of Commons on the Conservative side; nor did Disraeli; nor does Mr. Balfour, nor Sir Charles Russell. A member, however, can keep his hat on only when he is in his own seat. If he rises to leave his seat and go out of the House, he has to keep off his hat; so long as he remains standing in any part of the House, he has to keep off his hat. There are some of the older members who, even when they lean over their seats to converse with a member on the bench in front of them, take off their hats. And it is usual, too, when a member interjects an observation across the floor to take it off. It was also the invariable custom when a member was referred to that he should raise his hat, but this rule is falling into desuetude.—From "The House of Commons," by Thomas Power O'Connor, in Harper's Magazine for December.

COMMISSIONERS' COURT.

All the members of the board got to work Monday, Hoffelder, Henderson and Lockwood, and they have kept busy since. At a slack time in work they figured up the bridge expense for the year, and find it much lower than usual. Of the new bridges undertaken since this fiscal year began, June 1, they find the total expense to be only about $2,700. This is a great decrease and has been partly brought about by better business methods by the board, and partly by our having fewer floods this year. The better business methods have come by experience, for now the board knows where to look out for expenses and leaks. They have learned to buy the stone and other material themselves, and by getting our own home mechanics to do the work, with a member of the board to oversee the work, a great saving is made. We think the experience of the past two or three years will bear good fruit. As usual, the first days of the session were taken up with general work, auditing bills, etc. Tuesdays are days for ditches and Wednesdays for liquor licenses. About half a dozen licenses were granted. The board is pushing work along nicely.

Truant Boys.

Boys should be in our schools. But all are not there. Monday one of our business firms received a load of wood, and in a few minutes not less than ten or twelve boys came for the job of carrying it in. They were all truants, for this happened during school hours. The business men refused to employ any of them, but waited till school closed and then let the job to a boy who had the good sense to stay at his work in school. This would be a good way to stop some of this truancy. If the boys find they can get a job better by staying in school and doing these jobs before or after school hours they will soon see their way clear, for a boy has an eye to business. These truant boys are possibly hurried off to school in the morning, and it may be that their parents think they are in the school room. But quite a number can be found on the streets or in stores, almost any day. Again we say, if there is a job for boys, let us give it to them before or after school hours, making a point in favor of the faithful school boy.

Fast Line to DesMoines.

The long list of cities in the west and northwest reached without change of cars via the North-Western Line, has been increased by the addition of DesMoines, the capital city of the great state of Iowa, and passengers for that point can now leave Chicago at a convenient hour in the evening, and arrive at DesMoines the following morning in time for breakfast. The train is fully up to the high standard always maintained by the North-Western Line, and is equipped with palace sleeping cars of the latest design, and reclining chair cars in which seats are furnished free of extra charge. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained upon application to any ticket agent or by addressing W. A Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago. Moved by the Cyclone.

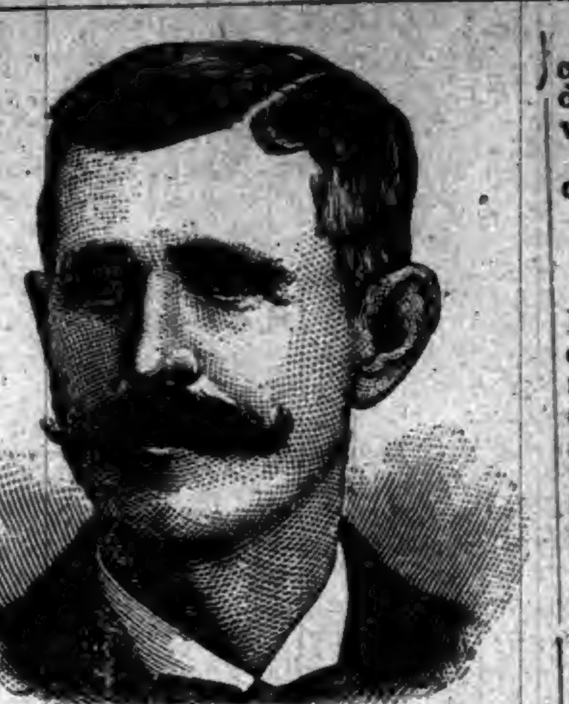
Kansas Man (visiting in the east)—We have lots of near neighbors now.

Friend—Why, I thought your nearest neighbor was twenty miles away.

"Yes, but we've had a cyclone since then."



A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy: a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

Youth—How am I to know that this bicycle is a model '93?

Dealer—My dear sir, if it were not a '93 we should not dare charge so much more than it is worth.

A Sad Death.

Can you describe anything worse than a young man dying by inches with consumption; cut off in the bloom of youth when bright prospects of happiness and prosperity are before him, a very sad death indeed. Is it not a fact that most cases of this kind are brought on by a cough, only slight at first, then more violent, followed by night sweats and a general breaking down of the entire system. These are cases in which people are to blame. Why not check this slight cough. Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup is guaranteed to cure. It will prevent consumption. Use it before it is too late. By druggists. Price .25, .50 and $1.

Miss Hubb—Do you call your wheel a bicycle or a bicicle?

Smart Boy—I call it a "bike."

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

FOOD FOR THE FLAMES.

ONE OF AUBURN'S GREATEST INDUSTRIES A PREY TO THE FIRE FIEND.

HORRIBLE DEATH OF NIGHT-WATCH GEO. FREDERICK.

THE AUBURN CHURCH FURNITURE FACTORY CONSUMED BY FIRE.

Fanned By The Gale, The Flames Lick Up an Adjacent Residence and Threaten Other Property.

Auburn has just had her most terrible experience with the fire fiend, accompanied by the loss of a life. The great factory of the Auburn Church Furniture Co. is a mass of ruins, and among the seething, smoking piles, the anxious seekers early Tuesday morning found all that the flames had spared of the remains of the night watchman, Geo. W. Frederick. The sad story is best told by a brief recapitulation of the testimony given at the coroner's inquest that convened in the office of Hartman & West, Tuesday afternoon. Confining our statement to this sworn testimony, we will put to rest many wild rumors that have found their way out on the streets.

The first person sworn was R. C. Baxter, who gave the first alarm. He awakened a little before two o'clock Tuesday morning and soon realized there was a fire near by. He stepped out on the porch and saw that the dry kiln of the factory, which is diagonally across the stree about 150 feet, was on fire, just fairly started. He yelled "fire" at once, and many times, then ran into the house got on his shoes and without coat or hat ran across to the factory and tried to turn in an alarm from a box on the west side of the building. But it did not work and he stopped a moment to read the directions, which he easily could by the light of the flames from the dry kiln. Following the printed directions he tried again, but it did not work and was getting hot, which he thinks caused the trouble. Dr. Hines was now coming to his assistance and suggested that Baxter try the next fire box to the south. He ran that way and on nearing it saw a man who called out that himself had sent in an alarm. Just then the fire bell sounded up town confirming this, and Baxter ran back to the factory. The flames were now lapping about the corner of the factory next the dry kiln and had got into the main building. He thinks there were no lights lit in the main building when he first came. He could have gone into the north side of the building, and would have done so had he known a man was inside. Heard no sound of any one inside, no screams for help, saw no sign of any one inside. The fire engine soon came, but he thinks that ten minutes from the time he first saw the fire nothing could have saved the factory, as the flames spread so rapidly. Charles Platter who was probably the third man to come, gave nearly the same testimony. Milo Husselman, the bookkeeper of the establishment, said he was awakened by his mother, ran to the factory which is on the same block to the west, the office being in the south end of the factory. He looked into the office, and the fire not having entered there, he felt sure he could get in and get the books from the safe, which though fire proof, he felt would have to stand a terrible heat. He found, however, on entering that the smoke at once rushed into the office nearly suffocating him. He turned the combination, however, and opened the safe, took out the journal and ledger, and finding he could not stand it to get more, shut the safe door again, turning on the combination, and went out. The rest of the sad history is known to all. The fire department worked nobly, and succeeded in saving the German Methodist church across the street north, D. Y. Husselman's and Mrs. Moss' residences east, and the buildings across the streets south. Those across to the west, though greatly heated, were in little danger as the wind came strong from that way. It blew so hard and the fire was so intense and lasted so long, that no doubt but for the fire department it would have spread to the east across the town. But they could not save Mr. McQuiston's dwelling which stood just east of the main building and but a few feet away, right in the path of the wind and flames. It was soon destroyed, but it helped to protect Mrs. Moss' house while it stood. All this time people were asking what had become of George Frederick, the night watch, as he had not been seen. Inquiry at his home showed he had not been there. His family soon came to the fire, tearfully asking continually if any one had seen him. But though some fancied they had seen him, the dreadful uncertainty grew, and the fear that he might be in the seething, flaming ruins before them became more powerful as the hours went on. The firemen and many citizens watched the red ruins till daylight and as soon as it was possible to do so, a search was made in such places as could be cooled enough to reach. At last a little heap was found on the extreme east side of the ruins and carefully examined. The dreaded truth was revealed. A part of the thighs, a portion of the skull, fragments of a pocketbook, a pocket knife and a button or two were all that remained of George Frederick. He had perished in that most dreaded way, burned alive. A rope was stretched around the spot to keep off the eager crowds, and in this Wm. Click and Perry Long stood to see that no one, even accidentally, disturbed the remains. Joe Robbins hastily drove up the Waterloo road and returned with Coroner Miser, who held an examination that afternoon as before mentioned. Some think he may have fallen asleep; others that he fought the fire when it started and was overcome by the smoke. Chas. Knisely, who lives across the street west, and Dr. Hines, who lives near by, heard two calls for help while yet in their rooms. They dressed as rapidly as possible, but after getting out heard no more, and as the main building was not yet on fire, supposed whoever called had got safely out. Mr. Knisely had talked with Frederick in the engine room about ten or eleven o'clock that night and thinks he was near that point when the fire came. As his lantern was found there after the fire, it is supposed he was somehow caught by the flames, dropped the lantern and tried to escape through the main room eastward where there was a window. But Mr. Keeran thinks this window had a pile of material before it, and it may have prevented his getting out and in his condition he may not have tried to go north, but was overpowered and fell near the window. But we will never know just how it all happened. His family were distracted by the terrible fate of the husband and father when his fate became certain. The remains, small as they were, were carefully gathered up and put in a box and taken to the undertakers. The funeral is at the Lutheran church at two p. m. to-day.

Of course the entire plant of the Church Furniture Co., so long one of the objects of Auburn's pride, is a complete loss—estimated at over $25,000. They had $8,000 insurance. It is a hard blow to Auburn as well as to the proprietors, Messrs McQuiston, Wilson and Keeran, who had we suppose, about all their means invested. And many men will be out of work. As to the future of the plant we cannot say.

NOTES.

The fire company and apparatus saved several times its cost by preventing a further spread of fire in that strong wind.

The ladies living near by were thoughtful enough to prepare a supply of hot, strong coffee for the firemen as they watched out the long hours till morning.

Several Garrett young people had been through here sleigh riding, but when near home saw the fire and returned, getting here while the fire was at its worst.

Our people all sympathize with the company, as they are among our best citizens and we suppose will lose nearly all they have. It will be hard on the men employed also.

When at its hottest, the cross arms of the electric light poles near the building caught fire and the covering of the wires burned or melted and soon the lights went out. But no lights were needed, for the baleful light from the burning factory was in all the air and in all places.

Change of Firm.

McDowell Brothers, (Tim and Doc') started a barber shop one door west of Ed. Baker's on West Eighth street, Wednesday of last week. The name of "Tim McDowell" is familiar to the gentry of Auburn, who have faces to shave. He practiced two years or more under the direction of Chas. Pommert. After finishing his apprenticeship with Mr. P. he started in business for himself, since which time he has been known as "Tim, the Barber." His younger brother "Doc.," as he is called, apprenticed under Tim in the present location several years ago. Both gentlemen are up in the profession and will put forth every effort to merit their share of the patronage in that line in Auburn. We hope the "boys" may realize the most lucrative portion of their most sanguine expectations. If you want a first-class shave or hair cut, it can be got at McDowell Brothers, on short notice.

The Hotel de Ralston.

Sheriff Ralston has had his hands full, or rather the jail full, since he first took the office. Such a run of boarders had never been known. He has already had a total of nearly 90, which is more than any other sheriff of DeKalb county had during a four years term. Some of them are pretty tough of course. But Mr. and Mrs. Ralston, in their separate lines of duty, seem to be just the persons to take care of them and keep them in bounds. The latest arrival is one of the men thought ot be in the postoffice robbery at Garrett, or rather the robbery of the postmaster, for he was on his way home when held up. On Saturday two women in town were arrested and sent to board with the sheriff. They were charged with keeping a house of ill fame, and judging from the names of Auburn men they refer to, one would think they were not only prosperous but quite popular. One of them has a child about a year old. So it will be seen that the population of the jail is varied, especially since the young darkey took up his lodgings there last week.

Adams Knott died at the jail Saturday evening about ten o'clock. He had been gradually getting weaker and failing for some time, and the attendants were not surprised when the end came. He had been there for some time, as his failing health had weakened his mental faculties till he was not able to care for himself. He was then taken to the County Home, but after a time his malady took a violent form and he had to be confined in the jail. He had good care and attention and was made as comfortable as possible in his condition. He had been unconcious for some hours when the end came. His relatives at Waterloo, Henry Knott and J. D. McAnally, were notified and came over and took charge of him. The funeral was at the M. E. church Wednesday, the interment being at Auburn.

Sheriff Ralston got word last Thursday that a girl who had deserted a three weeks old babe at Hudson, was boarding here in town. He called on her and finding the story true, sent word to Angola, and Friday the deputy sheriff came down and took her back. She insists she did not endanger the child's life, but knocked at the door and when she heard the people coming she ran off.

Sheriff Ralston had a backset to the sickness that struck him on the trip to Michigan City the week before. He had not fully recovered, but had to go to Garrett to look for a man he was after, and the exposure brought him down again, confining him to his room for a few days.

George Arnold, who was on trial last week at Angola, for complicity in stealing goods froms the cars at Garrett, was sent up for one year. He was going to fight the case, but after hearing the testimony of the prisoner, Phelps, who had been brought back from Michigan City as a witness, Arnold weakened, and entered a plea of guilty. There were others engaged in the same job but are not caught as yet.

The Great Through Car Line.

It is a well established fact that the North-Western Line (Chicago and North-Western R'y) in its equipment and train service, its general facilities for the accomodation of all classes of travel, and its methods of looking after the comfort and welfare of its patrons takes rank with the leading railways of the world.

Its through car lines extend from Chicago to St. Paul and Minneapolis, the "Twin Cities of the Northwest;" to Duluth, the Superiors, Ashland, Marquette, and the wonderful iron and copper regions of northern Wisconsin and Michigan; to Winona, Pierre, and the rich agricultural sections of Minnesota and the Dakotas; to Des Moines, Sioux City, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, the prosperous and growing cities of Iowa and Nebraska; to Deadwood, the Dakota Hot Springs, and the famous mining districts of the Black Hills; to Denver, Salt Lake and the health resorts of Colorado and Utah; to San Francisco, Cal.; Portland, Oregon, and Pacific Coast and Puget Sound points.

The perfectly equipped vestibuled trains of the North-Western Line convey the traveler comfortably, safely and quickly to nearly every part of the West and Northwest, and while one may travel surrounded by all the luxuries afforded by an equipment of magnificent sleeping cars, buffet, smoking and library cars, compartment sleeping cars, and superb dining cars, the comfort and convenience of passengers desiring to travel at small expense is promoted by the provision of accomodations for their use in Tourist Sleeping cars, Free Reclining Chair cars and commodious day coaches.

In a word, if you contemplate a trip to almost any portion of the West and Northwest, your ticket should read via the North-Western Line. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained of ticket agents in the United States and Canada, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North Western R'y, Chicago, Ill. 51

EVENTS OF INTEREST

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

The Stamp Clerk at the Chicago Postoffice Robbed of $7,000—Three Negro Tramps Lynched for Assaulting a Woman—A Long Tramp—The Paris Anarchists.

A DARING RAID.

Held-Up in the Postoffice at Chicago.

Chicago special: Andrew J. Robertson, cashier of the wholesale stamp department in the postoffice at the Government building, was found by R. Zimmerman and Miss Marie Jones, two clerks employed in the mailing department, lying on the floor of his office in a pool of blood about 10 o'clock the other night. Medical aid was at once summoned, and when Robertson had sufficiently recovered he made a statement saying that at about 7:30 o'clock, while he was engaged in balancing up his accounts, some one appeared at his window and asked him how he was coming out. Robertson replied that he thought he was all right. The stranger said that he had sent his boy for stamps during the day and that Robertson had given him too many and that he would return them if Robertson would open the door. When the man gave a private rap used by the clerks in the building the door was opened. As soon as the robber was inside the office he attacked Robertson and a terrible conflict ensued. Money was scattered all over the office. One package of $300, one of $500 and one of $800 were found. So far the police have no clue to the robber. The exact amount of money taken is not known, but it was said by Government employes that the sum would reach $7,000. Robertson was taken to the Presbyterian Hospital, where the physicians said that his wounds were dangerous.

THREE LYNCHED.

Negro Tramps Attacked a Defenseless Woman and Pay the Penalty.

A quadruple lynching occurred in Dallas County, Alabama. Four negro tramps went to the house of Mrs. William Jones during the absence of her husband and knocked on the door. She was alone and as she went to the door she saw the men and refused to let them in. They demanded entrance and one of them pushed the door open. At this juncture Mrs. Jones opened fire on the crowd with a pistol, wounding the man who had broken open the door. The tramps fled. It was not long before the alarm was given and a posse of determined citizens quickly organized. They followed the trail of the tramps by the blood left along the route by the wounded man. Three miles away he was overtaken in the road. At the point of pistols he told the direction in which the others had gone. A rope was put about his neck and the search for the other three continued.

Just before daylight the others were caught, and all confessed their guilt. They were taken to a tree in a neighboring swamp and just at sunrise all four were suspended in a very quiet manner to the same limb. A volley of shots were fired at the swaying forms, after which the posse rode away.

ANARCHISTS CAST LOTS

To Decide Who Should Throw the Fata Bomb.

Paris special: While Vaillant was in this city he mixed with an anarchist named Graillat, who was afterwards lynched here. By a singular coincidence Vaillant, last week, visited Abbe Lemire, who was among the Deputies injured by the explosion of Vaillant's bomb. Abbe Lemire took Vaillant's name and address and gave him a few francs. Vaillant almost admits that he drew lots with other anarchists to decide who should undertake the murderous work. Ten anarchists were with him in the gallery and they are now in custody. All of them have spent a portion of their lives in England, showing that the anarchists are affiliated together, and eventually will be found to be subsidized by patrons who have been generally regarded as apostles of less militant doctrines.

Walked 3,200 Miles.

New York special: Fred Miller, the pedestrian, and Gaess, his dog, who started to walk from San Francisco to New York (3,200 miles) on June 26, have arrived here. Miller says he met with no trouble except the want of food when he crossed Arizona and New Mexico. Miller was to complete the journey in six months and had to depend entirely upon the public for food for himself and dog. He has been tramping for five months and sixteen days. He does not look any the worse for the trip, but he says he feels weary. When he started he weighed 128 pounds, and when he was weighed here he scaled 118.

Australian Wheat Crop.

An estimate of the Australian wheat crop for 1893 places the yield of Victoria at 13,500,000 and South Australia at 11,250,000.

Released from Prison.

Buenos Ayres special: General Alem and Colonel Espinaf, leaders in the recent revolutionary movement, and who are now in prison, will be liberated shortly by order of the Supreme Court.

Nine Wives and Thirty-Two Children.

J. V. Burrors, aged 104, died at Denison, Texas. He had been married nine times, and was the father of thirty-two children, twenty-four of whom are living.

Mexican Revolutionists.

Deming (N. M.) special: A report was brought in recently that a body of Mexican troops, consisting of two officers and thirty soldiers, marching overland from the City of Chihuahua to Ascension were attacked by rebels. The Captain was killed and twenty-five soldiers deserted to the rebels. Reports of skirmishes are frequently circulated but the Government makes every effort to suppress information so that the outside world may not realize the extent of the unrest of the people. The present aim of the rebels is to secure possession of the State of Chihuahua. Organized mobs are in progress in Chihuahua, Sonora, Sinolia and Guerrero. The revolution undoubtedly is of serious consequence.

FROM HONOLULU.

Another Steamer Left the Islands in a Peaceful State.

San Francisco special: The schooner Transit has arrived, bringing the following letter from the United Press correspondent:

After the steamer Almeda sailed Minister Willis stated that nothing definite would be done here until he had received a reply to dispatches sent to Washington. In an interview with a Star reporter Minister Willis said: "Any trouble precipitated on either side would be stopped at once by the United States forces."

President Dole called upon Minister Willis on the 17th to inquire how far the United States authority would be carried in case of an emergency. The provisional government seems to be fully satisfied with Willis' reply. It is reliably stated that President Dole informed Minister Willis that the provisional government would require no aid from the United States unless called for, and that any breach of peace that might occur would be speedily dealt with by the Hawaiian Government, and that they would aid him in keeping the peace. It is understood that Minister Willis replied that he would stand back of the present Government until the present difficulty was settled, and that he did not expect trouble unless it was precipitated by irresponsible persons on one side or the other.

Interviews with members of the provisional Government show that they are fully determined to brook no interference until the United States Government is officially heard from. Troops are kept fully armed and ready for action at a moment's notice. Prominent Americans assert that the restoration of the Queen shall not take place. There are about fifteen hundred rifles, with a full supply of ammunition in the hands of private citizens which the Queen's forces could not secure in case of restoration. It is taken as a fact that the provisional government and resident Americans would surely resist either a compromise or restoration. Minister Willis stated that he was confident that legislation favorable to the Hawaiian Islands would soon be enacted in the United States.

ANOTHER HOLD-UP.

Train Robbers Do Bad Work in Texas.

The cannon ball train, No. 2, on the Texas Pacific railroad, was robbed by six men at Duvall, Texas. The express safe was looted of its contents and the passengers robbed of their money and other valuables. It is not known what the express company's loss is. The train was stopped by the turning of a switch by the robbers and the engineer, not obeying orders with the alacrity required, was shot in the shoulder.

About fifty shots were fired into the engine, baggage, and express cars and the mail car was also riddled but not robbed. The engineer and fireman were ordered to open the express car and this was done as soon as the engineer was recognized. The baggagemaster and express messenger were stationed alongside the car and forced to hold up their hands nearly an hour by two of the bandits who stood guard over them. One of the shots entered and broke Fireman Gorrigan's right arm, but he was compelled to hold up the stump until he fell to the ground exhausted. The robbers were very profane and brutal to the men and women in the coaches and struck some of them with pistols because they had so little money. The sleepers were not entered. It is believed the robbers got only a few hundred dollars all told. The gang's identity is unknown.

Will Resist Restoration.

The steamer China, which left San Francisco November 21, and Honolulu, probably about November 28, has just arrived at Yokahamo, Japan. Officers and passengers stated that when the steamer left the island, the provisional government was still in power and maintaining a very determined attitude. Much excitement prevails and the action of the United States Government is awaited with the greatest anxiety. Members of the Provisional Government are resolute in their declarations against the restoration and openly expressed the intention of resisting to the utmost any attempt that President Cleveland might make to reinstate the Queen.

Mello's Ships Make Things Lively About Rio Harbor.

The Navy Department has received the following dispatch from Commander Pickings at Rio: "The Brazilian Government has requested consuls to warn vessels to move from the present anchorages and has drawn a line inside of which it is dangerous to venture. This prevents the discharge of cargoes at wharves." This is interperted to mean that the anchorage and the wharves have come within the line of fire of the forts and Mello's ships and it is not safe to come within that line.

Swallowed Her Teeth.

Miss Helen Burns of Milwaukee, had an upper set of false teeth on a rubber plate. Upon retiring the other night she forgot to take them out. On awakening she found that in some manner the teeth had fallen into her throat. She was awakened by the pain caused by their passage down her throat After they had been swallowed they caused no more pain, and so far she has been in no way inconvenienced by their presence in her stomach.

The Salute of Mello.

Washington special: Commodore Stanton called at the Navy Department the other morning and submitted to the Secretary his written report of the incident of his salute of Mello in the harbor of Rio. Having completed this duty and waiting orders, the Commodore is at liberty to go where he pleases. He immediately left for his home in New London, simply leaving his address with the Department.

State of Trade.

R. G. Dun's Review of Trade says: Trade of all kinds is waiting. There is no visible improvement and on the whole indications are a little less satisfactory than a week ago. Reports from all cities show a hesitating trade almost everywhere, with a decided disposition to wait until Congress has acted upon the tariff question. The uncertainty is likely to last some weeks.

Working the Farmers.

Bogus telegram swindlers are working the farmers in the vicinity of Fort Wayne. They call at a farm-house, rush in, and deliver a telegram, then demand the cost of sending the message, 50 cents, and from $1 to $4 for delivering it in the country. The scheme is a rank swindle, but is worked successfully.

An Accident on the Fort Wayne Road.

At Helena, Ohio, a small station on the Pennsylvania Railroad, a sleigh containing seven people was struck by a freight train. The occupants jumped and escaped serious injury except Mrs. W. H. K. Gossard, who remained in the sleigh until it was overturned and received injuries that will probably prove fatal.

Prominent Attorney Assaulted.

An unknown assailant made a murderous attack upon Attorney Thomas Kissane at Ironwood, Mich., and he is not expected to live. Mr. Kissane represents the Water Works Company, owned principally by New Yorkers, and has recently been engaged in a rather stormy litigation. The attack is believed to have been made on account of this legal contest.

Saloon Blown Up.

The Tennaire frame block at Ossian, Ind., which had been leased by a Bluffton man for a saloon, was blown up by dynamite. The noise of the explosion was deafening and the building was left a total wreck. The roof was blown off and the front went out in the street in splinters. The people of Ossian are opposed to saloons and it is difficult to find out who did the job.

Help for Destitutes in Michigan.

Gov. Rich of Michigan, says that it was not improbable that a special session of the Legislature would be called to consider the matter of relief for the Upper Peninsula miners. It is estimated that $150,000 will be needed to tide them over until May 1. He is preparing to go and make personal investigation, and will decide about a special session on his return.

Wants the Government to Pay It.

Herr Tischendoerffer, electrical engineer of the firm of Schuckert & Co. of Nuremberg, owners of the great searchlight on top of the World's Fair manufacturers building is in Washington, where he will endeavor to sell the light to the United States Government. The idea is to place the light at Sandy Hook for military and other purposes.

Cochran Sentenced.

Philadelphia special: Henry S. Cochran, the ex-chief weigher of the Philadelphia mint who was recently convicted of stealing $135,000 worth of gold bullion from the institution, has been sentenced to seven years and six months' imprisonment in the Eastern Penitentiary.

A Dangerous Bag.

A bag of coffee received by John O'Donahue & Sons, New York, from Mexico, was found on being opened to contain a big lump of dynamite with a fuse and four percussion caps attached to it. The evident intention was to blow up the steamship by which the shipment was made.

A Steamer Abandoned.

The big steamer, F. W. Wheeler, ashore three miles east of Michigan City, Ind., has been abandoned as a total wreck and the wrecking expedition was sent back to Chicago. Next spring an effort will be made to recover her machinery, but that is all which will be worth saving.

The Rascals Rode Off.

Thieves burglarized Foreman's general store, at St. Paris, Ohio, blew open the safe and carried off goods and money amounting to $500. The rascals appropriated the use of a handcar and made their escape over the Ohio Southern extension.

Blown to Atoms.

By an explosion of dynamite in the new tunnel now building at Armonk, N. Y., to divert the Bryan River waters into Kensico reservoir, one man was blown into fragments and another disemboweled. At least five others sustained serious injuries.

Robber Shot Dead.

Three men attempted to rob Samuel Clifford in his West Adams street grocery, Chicago, in broad daylight. Clifford shot and killed one of the intruders, the others escaped. The dead man is said to be Frank King, a notorious criminal.

Threaten Bloodshed.

The order of the Southern Pacific Railroad that no tramps will be allowed to ride on freight trains may result in bloodshed. There are 145 tramps camped at Lordsburg, Ari., who threaten to derail passenger trains if the order is enforced.

A Big Haul.

The Plano National Bank at Plano, Collin County, Texas, eighteen miles north of Dallas, on the Houston and Texas Central Railroad, was raided by safe-blowers, and almost a clean sweep made of the funds, over $20,000 being taken.

Five Seamen Drowned.

London special: The bark Emma foundered in the English Channel off Rye, Sussex. One of her crew was drowned. The schooner Starlight has been wrecked off Barrow. Four of her crew were drowned.

Burned to Death.

Lee Bonford of Jeffersonville, Ind., 27 years old, was seized with a fit and fell into a grate fire, being burned to death.

Beat a Burglar to Death.

Dr. Roger Seffans, jr. of Lubeck, Pa., caught a burglar in his house and beat him to death with a revolver.

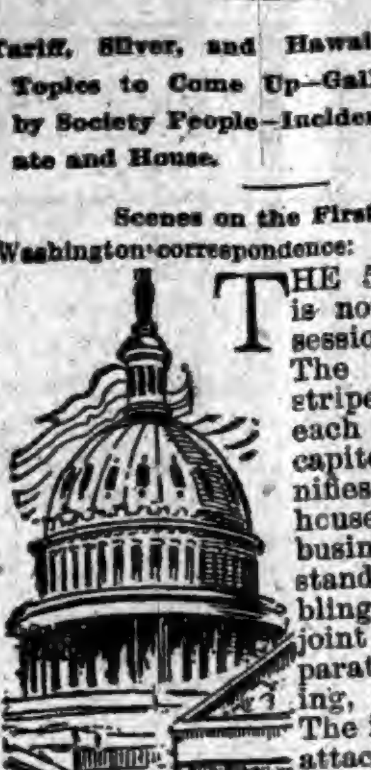
CONGRESS IS OPENED.

FIFTY-THIRD SESSION PROMISES TO BE LIVELY.

Tariff, Silver, and Hawaii Among the Topics to Come Up—Galleries Crowded by Society People—Incidents in the Senate and House.

Scenes on the First Day.

Washington correspondence:



THE 53d Congress is now in regular session assembled. The stars and stripes float over each end of the capitol—which signifies that both houses are doing business at the old stand. The assembling of the great joint body was, comparatively speaking, commonplace. The interest which attaches to such an event was less because the extra session had taken the edge off the appetite of curiosity. Nevertheless there was plenty to interest the stranger. He who is present for the first time at an opening of Congress sees below him the men who make the wheels of the nation go round, as it were. He feels that he is at the fountain head of things. He realizes that he is in the midst of big affairs and he is pleased. He has, of course, read of Congress. To be in its presence, to see it work, to appreciate that here are born measures which grow into laws and dominate the nation, begets a new sensation. He can't help feeling impressed. It is for that reason every one of the several thousand in the galleries pays close attention to all that is done; for that reason that the thousands in the corridors stand there, the patient ones hoping that in some way they may get in, the impatient struggling, pushing and elbowing, but with no better result.

The crowds in the galleries on opening day are always of a higher order than at any other time. No one is admitted except by ticket; and tickets are obtainable from members only, unless some recipient sees fit to give his pasteboard away. There are always many women in the galleries. And most of them wear their best attire.

The Senate is deemed, and is, the more exclusive body. And the very nobbiest of the nobs go there, and for form's sake are bored as they watch the slow coaches, while all the time could they but disguise themselves they would much rather be in the House. But lots of nobs, women as well as men, select the House and go there early. They will, at least many of them, come often during this first session of Congress.

Much for Congress to Do.

Though this session is regular there are many reasons for believing that it will be extraordinary as well. There are bills of great importance to pass, bills which will give birth not to pure debate alone but to ill-feeling, anger in some instances, probably, and repartee swiftly developing into blunt contradiction. Some of the debates will furnish a good education in statesmanship before the session is over. The tariff question will be discussed from A to Z and back again. A great many have already prepared speeches on it. The rest will either prepare them or speak on the spur of the moment. "And I wish the majority would be impaled on the spur," said a correspondent who has listened to the tariff debate for lo! these many years.

Then there is the silver question. One might think that the people had had enough of silver talk and be forgiven for the thought. But not so Brother Bland. He believes that prosperity will never come till the country has free silver. He will seek to obtain the sanction of Congress for free coinage at every opportunity.

Then there is the Hawaiian incident, which will serve for discussion. Republicans view it greedily, and they are licking their chops in anticipation of the feast. How they will hold the Democratic party, and the administration in particular, up to scorn! How they will tear Secretary Gresham's letter to Cleveland! How they will rip up the back any reference the President may make to it! And then the war of words. For the Democrats will talk back.

Meeting of the Senate.

The assembling of the Senate was tame. That is not surprising. It is invariably tame. The galleries were filled, of course. They are always filled on the first day. This is due partly to the presence of the families of the Senators, but mostly to the overflow from the House. There is very little to attract the Washingtonian to the Senate, save when some prominent Senator is to speak or some vote on an important question is to be taken. The Senators file in, or rather come in, on the first day just as they do on every other day.

Scenes in the House.

The chief interest centered in the House on opening day. The scene in the Senate is very respectable; but the scene in the House is breezier. There is more life in the House. The blood pulses faster. The members are more apt to do things: and incidents are more likely to happen. The galleries were packed long before a corporal's guard of members appeared on the floor. All but the press gallery. That didn't fill till a few moments before the clock told that the hour of 12 o'clock had come. Then that gallery also was full. In it were correspondents representing almost every newspaper of importance in the country, several representing Canadian papers and a few papers across the Atlantic. As the boyish chaplain rose to offer prayer a stillness fell upon the House, and from the rooms back of the press galleries came the tick, tick, tick of the telegraph sending the stories of the scenes within the hall throughout the length and breadth of the land. The chaplain's prayer over, the hubbub of conversation rose from the arena and was augmented by the comment in the galleries. At 1:35 p. m. Executive Clerk Pruden appeared in the House and delivered the President's message, which the clerk was directed by the Speaker to read.

Routine Business.

The Torrey bankruptcy bill was up in the House Friday, and Mr. Bland moved to strike out the enacting clause. Advocates of the measure protested that it was unfair to reject the bill before the House had had a chance to perfect it by amendment, but the motion was carried by a vote of 142 to 111. The admission of Utah as a State is being considered. The Senate did nothing of importance. Both houses adjourned until Monday.

How the World Wags.

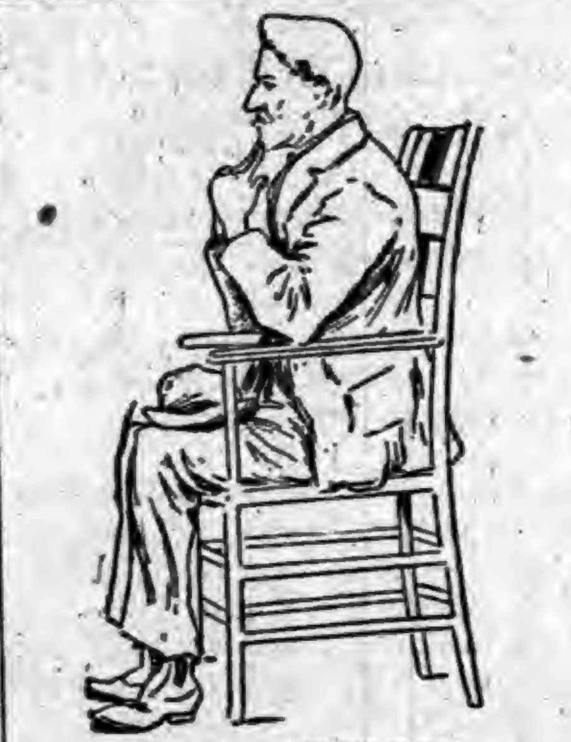
THE Wuerpel Switch and Signal Company assigned at St. Louis, owing $98,000.

PAULINE CUSHMAN, the female spy of the rebellion, committed suicide at San Francisco.

ASSASSIN IS ON TRIAL.

Case Against Prendergast, Carter Harrison's Slayer, Begun.

Patrick Eugene Prendergast was placed on trial for his life before Judge Brentano in the Chicago Criminal Court Wednesday for the murder of Mayor Harrison on the evening of Oct. 28. The anticipated public interest in the case was not manifested to the extent of any great effort to fill the courtroom. Several people attempted to secure admission to the room and a few succeeded, but the number of applicants was doubtless limited by the fact that the trial had been once postponed and the announcement that no one who had no actual business in the case would be allowed to enter. That rule was enforced rigidly by a strong body of policemen and bailiffs who guarded the lower corridors and the stairways. The crowds that were present when the anarchists and the Cronin murderers were tried and sentenced in the same dingy old court-room were therefore lacking and the silence was almost complete. Prendergast was ready for trial, and Jailer Morris brought him to the bar of justice. A more unhappy and inconsequential-looking wretch cannot be imagined than the prisoner when he was marched into court by the big jailer. It was apparent that he feigned composure, but the attempt failed miserably. Glancing first at the Judge on the bench he cast his eyes around the crowded room until he met the gaze of his attorneys, when he slightly hung his head and assumed a dogged manner.



PRENDERGAST ON TRIAL.

"The People vs. Prendergast" was the announcement made by Judge Brentano at 10:30 o'clock. The attorneys announced their readiness to proceed, and examination of veniremen proceeded at once.

ESTIMATES BY MR. CARLISLE.

The Secretary of the Treasury Figures Out the Appropriations Desired.

The book of estimates for appropriations for the fiscal year 1894 and 1895 has been sent to Congress. The amount estimated necessary to carry on the government for the fiscal year is $411,879,041, as against estimates for 1893-4 of $421,612,215 and appropriations for 1894 of $432,456,526. The estimates for 1895 are made up as follows:

Executive	$203,280
Legislative	7,903,[illegible]
State department	1,853,[illegible]
Treasury department	120,455,[illegible]
War department	55,277,4[illegible]
Navy department	28,888,774
Interior department	159,2[illegible]9,220
Postoffice department	8,397,866
Department of agriculture	3,2[illegible]3,843
Department of labor	161,870
Department of justice	6,273,345

The sum of $43,000 is asked for to pay the salaries of an examining force of thirty clerks in the civil-service commission. The work of the examining branch has been more than doubled by the extension of the classified service. For the investigation of pension cases $500,000 is asked, as against $200,000 appropriated for the present fiscal year.

In the pension appropriations the principal changes are a reduction of $5,000,000 for pension payments, an increase of $1,000,000 for fees and expenses of examining surgeons, and an increase of $100,000 for clerk hire at pension agencies.

For rivers and harbors a total of $12,510,000 is estimated for, an increase of more than $5,000,000 over the appropriations for the current year. Of this amount $7,500,000 is to be expended upon such works as may be directed by Congress. Some items in the list are: Galveston, Texas, $500,000; St. Mary's River at the falls, Michigan, $300,000; improving Hay Lake channel, Michigan, $150,000; improving Mississippi River from mouth of Ohio River to Minneapolis, $1,625,000. For the Rock Island (Ill.) arsenal, $115,706 is asked; for Benicia arsenal, California, $23,500; for arsenal at Indianapolis, Ind., $38,972; for gun and mortar batteries, $1,893,126; for sites for fortification and sea-coast defenses, $500,000; for torpedoes for harbor defense, $101,550, and for armament of fortifications, $4,370,437, as against an appropriation of $1,638,405 for the present fiscal year; a total of $7,438,413 is asked for fortifications and other works of defense, an increase of $5,000,000 over the present fiscal year.

Under the Postoffice Department $16,250,000 is asked for compensation to postmasters; an increase of $1,650,000; for free delivery, $12,327,785, an increase of over $1,000,000; railway postal car service, $26,100,000, an increase of $2,400,000. It is estimated that there will be a postal deficiency of $5,971,76 6 for the year, for which an appropriation is asked.

A note accompanying the statement of appropriations made for the present year to pay the bounty on sugar says:

> "The Secretary of the Treasury having recommended the repeal of the sugar-bounty law, no estimate is submitted for the fiscal year 1895. In case the law is not repealed $11,000,000 will be required for the purpose."

No estimate is submitted for the support of the Bureau of American Republics.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

SOBER OR STARTLING, FAITHFULLY RECORDED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties and General News Notes.

Condensed State News.

GOSHEN will increase her night police force.

CHRIS WISSLER'S fine horse and buggy were stolen out of his barn near Dublin.

WILLIAM FOLSOM, postmaster of Bowling Green, the old county seat of Clay County, is dead.

IT is rumored that a party of Chicago and eastern capitalists are going to build a tin plate factory at Summitville.

A FORT WAYNE man, to amuse himself, ruins ladies' dresses and cloaks as they pass him on the street by squirting paint on them.

SILAS MOORE has been sentenced to one year in the Penitentiary for stealing a pair of pants from the store of H. Brokhage, at Vincennes.

EDWARD BRADY, a barber of Porter, has sued a Chicago paper for $10,000 for falsely publishing his name as the referee of a prize fight.

WILLIAM SHARP of Herbert, Grant County, a deaf mute, was killed by the north-bound passenger train on the Big Four Railroad near Jonesboro.

THE greatest suffering among the poor and unemployed of Richmond is reported. Between 100 and 200 families are said to be daily fed by charity.

THE Nelson Glass Works at Muncie, employing about 125 hands, has resumed operations. All of Muncie's glass factories are now in operation.

THE large feed and saw mill and grain elevator of Temple & Sons, at Vermont, Delaware County, burned. Loss, $10,000, on which there was a small insurance.

CHARLES ADSIT, aged 13 years, was killed in a runaway in Warren. He was thrown out of the wagon and the wheels passed over his body, injuring him so badly that he died in a short time.

GEORGE C. MCCONNELL, aged 40 years, a member of the firm of McConnell & Parrish, which owned and operated the Shelbyville Chair Factory, died of consumption. He leaves a widow.

GRIP has broken out among the 850 inmates of the Prison North at Michigan City. Seventy-five cases have already occurred. Many guards are ill and have had to be replaced by outsiders.

AT Lexington, Ella Amos, a 10-year-old girl, was burned to death. Her dress caught fire from a grate. Every vestige of clothing was burned from the unfortunate girl and her flesh was literally baked.

THERE have been 25 men arrested at Bloomfield charged with being an organized gang that have been systematically robbing freight cars at Worthington. It is said that one of the men has confessed and told where all the plunder can be found.

MR. DAN REIBOLD of Terre Haute, and his grown daughter narrowly escaped being asphyxiated. They were both discovered unconscious in the cellar where they had gone to look for a gas leak. Mrs. Riebold pulled them out into the open air.

ROBERT REYNOLDS, a colored employe in the American Wire Nail Mill, was terribly scalded at Anderson. He was struck by a crane and knocked into a vat of boiling sulphuric acid, from which he was rescued a moment later. His recovery is doubtful.

AT Vincennes a 3-year old child of James D. Williams, grandson of the late Gov. Williams, was burned to death in the yard of her parents. The child was playing around an open fire built for the purpose of heating water, when her clothing caught.

WHILE inspecting an empty cask in the fermenting cellar at the Schmidt brewery, Indianapolis, George Lang, aged 45, was seriously injured. The cellar was dark and he lighted a match, which was followed by a terrific explosion of gas. It is thought that internal injuries may result seriously.

AT Goshen, Oscar Swanson, one of the off-bearers at Lesh, Sanders & Egbert Co.'s saw-mills, lost his life in a horrible and sickening way. While at work he slipped and fell onto one of the immense band saws, and in a second his head was completely severed from his body and left hanging to it by a thin strip of skin.

WHILE Clara Wilhoyte, the 5-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Wilhoyte, who reside near Jeffersonville, was standing before the grate her dress caught fire, and she was terribly burned before the flames could be extinguished. She lingered in terribly agony a few hours, when she expired. This is the third case of the kind in that county the last month.

IT is stated on reliable authority that a scheme is on foot to pipe Indiana natural gas across the State line connecting with the piplines that supply Dayton, Springfield, Lima, Piqua and other Ohio cities, with a view of supplying those cities. The parties have already secured a large block of leases in Jay County. If this is done it will be a factor in shortening the life of the Indiana field.

WABASH COLLEGE has secured a prize in the shape of a petrified stump that was at the World's Fair. It is from the Bad Lands of North Dakota, is ten feet long and six feet in its shortest diameter. The stump is hollow and every line, knot and grain of the wood is perfectly reproduced. It arrived recently on a flat car and will be placed in the museum. The doors will have to be widened in order to get the stump into the building.

A SCHEME came to light at Elwood, the other day by which Dick Goodman, the burglar, who was shot, was to escape. A coffin containing a "dummy" was to be buried and the word was to be given out that it was the remains of Goodman. He was in the meantime to be taken to parts unknown.

HENRY BRUNER and wife of Greencastle, whose death occurred from grip and old age within half hour of each other, were buried in one grave. They had been married sixty-two years. Mr. Bruner, aged 81, died first, and his wife, aged 83, expired almost immediately on being told that he was dead.

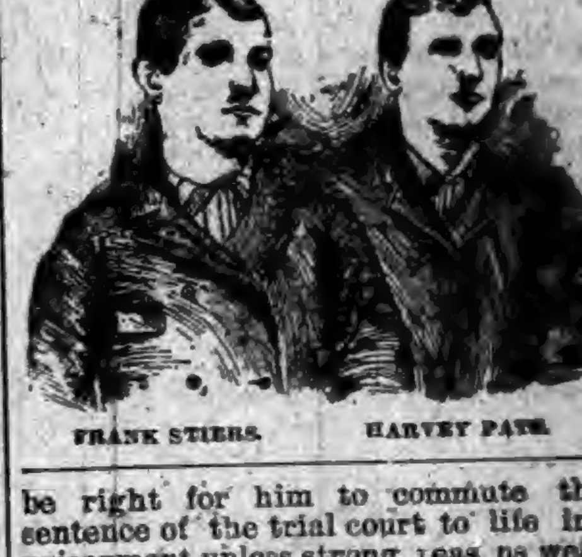
SADIE LISTER, daughter of an old veteran at Elwood, some time ago made application for a pension and back pay due her father. The voucher allowing $1,500 arrived at Elwood the other day a few hours after she had died.

THE suit of Mrs. Wesner, widow of the late C. S. Wesner of Lebanon, wherein Mrs. Wesner seeks to recover damages in the sum of $10,000 from J. C. Brown for the killing of her husband at Danville last spring has been taken on change of venue to the Hamilton Circuit Court for trial. The hearing is set for Jan. 8. Brown was acquitted of the charge of murder, and the pending suit promises some sensational features.

HANGED FOR MURDER.

Harvey Pate and Frank Stiers Die on the Gallows at Danville.

Harvey Pate and Frank Stiers were executed at Danville, Ill., for the murder of Henry Helmick. The drop fell without incident. The case was rendered interesting by the decision of the Governor upon the application for a reprieve. In denying the application the Governor said that he considered hanging an unnecessary cruelty, that he did not believe that it was of any benefit to the State and that it did not deter others from committing murder. Inasmuch, however, as capital punishment was a part of the laws of the State he did not think it would be right for him to commute the sentence of the trial court to life imprisonment unless strong reasons were adduced, and no such reasons were apparent.



FRANK STIERS. HARVEY PATE.

The wanton murder of Henry J. Helmick, a wealthy farmer of Pilot Township, by Harvey Pate, Frank Stiers, Charles Smoot, and Elias McJunkins, upon the high road, while he was driving home from church with his wife on the evening of Aug. 25, caused intense excitement in an otherwise quiet neighborhood. The four highwaymen stopped the farmer about 9 o'clock in the evening and demanded his money. Helmick refused to surrender his cash. The next instant Harvey Pate, the leader of the quartet, shot the farmer. Stiers almost at the same moment fired his revolver and the farmer fell dead upon the shoulder of his thoroughly frightened wife. Smoot and McJunkins, whose attempt to hold Helmick's horses had failed, viewed the awful work of their companions with a tear which later caused Smoot to make a confession implicating his companions. The arrest and trial of the young desperadoes quickly followed. Pate and Stiers were sentenced to death and the others sent to prison for life.

THEY LEFT NO CLEWS.

South Bend Bank Robbers Were Very Smooth.

No clew has yet been discovered to the South Bend, Ind., bank robbers says a dispatch. The directors have offered $1,000 reward and 25 per cent. of all moneys recovered for their capture. Four thousand dollars of the plunder is in gold, $5,000 in legal tender and $700 in notes of the bank. The rest is in currency of small denominations.

The South Bend National Bank, one of the largest banks in Northern Indiana, was robbed of $15,900 in broad daylight while hundreds of people were on the street. The robbers succeeded in getting away with their booty without leaving the slightest clew. Cashier Myron Campbell remained at the bank, which is in the heart of the city, until all employes were gone. He then, as he supposed, locked the middle door of the vault and left everything in the usual shape at the noon recess. At 12:50 he returned by the street door. He passed down the corridor alongside the cashiers', collectors', and other desks, and turned to enter the door opening back of him when his foot struck a chisel. Ten minutes later Assistant Cashier John M. Brown arrived. Campbell showed him the chisel. An investigation was immediately instituted, and the men found a rear window open, the back door unlocked, and the door between the directors' room and the counting room mutilated. A rush was then made for the vault. The door was as Campbell left it. A glance showed that money had been taken, but they could not tell how much. The police were at once notified.

Cashier Campbell has been identified with the South Bend National Bank for the past sixteen years. He has been cashier of the concern since 1890. Mr. Campbell is also treasurer of the North Indiana and Southern Michigan Agricultural Association, of the First Methodist Church and of the new paper box manufactory of South Bend. He is also treasurer of the Young Men's Christian Association. It has been Cashier Campbell's custom to lock the doors of his bank at noon and go home to eat. His three bookkeepers, one of whom is a woman, always dine at the same hour.

AT WAR WITH HERSELF.

The Story of a Woman's Atonement, by Charlotte M. Braeme.

CHAPTER XXI—Continued.

"It seems to me," she thought, with a happy smile, "that even the flowers know he is coming. I am sure those rose are more fragrant, and the lilies more brilliant. I can see their golden hearts."

She buried her face amid the cool, deep lily-cups—she was as one bewitched with the charm of her own happiness—until Lady Fanshawe, struck by her manner, ventured to remonstrate.

"Dear Lady Charnleigh, are you not wanting in that great charm of all well-bred women—perfect repose?"

Repose while the leaves were whispering to the summer wind, while the bees and butterflies coquetted with the flowers, while her own heart was beating with delight that knew no words, every pulse and nerve thrilling! Lady Charnleigh laughed aloud.

"I am not conducting myself as a countess should," she said. "I had forgotten all about what you call the dignity of my position, auntie; I only remembered that I was, without exception, the happiest girl in the wide world. It is time to dress, Ethel," she added, turning to Miss Dacre. "I want you to look bewitching—I want le beau sabreur to fall in love with you."

She spoke lightly and never saw the death-like pallor that came over the sweet face.

"He has done something of the kind already, Leonie, but it is with you, not with me."

"A fact which would show that he had neither taste nor sense, if it were true," laughed Lady Charnleigh. "Let me advise you as to what dress you should wear, Ethel. Stand quite still, and I will study you."

She made a pretty picture, standing with a studious expression on her face, her finger laid on her lips. She could not be silent for long.

"What dreamy, poetic beauty yours is, Ethel! How strange that you should be so like the 'Elaine' we saw at the exhibition! The painter must have known you."

"I do not think so," said Miss Dacre.

"You remind me of starlight, and—oh, Ethel, how beautiful the starlight is, how calm, serene, and holy, yet giving one a vivid idea of hidden fire!"

"You began to speak of my dress," observed Miss Dacre, patiently; "and you have already reached the stars. When will you be on earth again?"

"I shall never behave like a countess. 'A true lady of rank,' says auntie, 'should be known by her dignified silence and repose.' Your dress, Ethel, must be black lace over white silk with silver flowers; you will personify starlight then."

But her own toilet was not so easily decided upon. That evening Lady Charnleigh was difficult to please. At last she chose a bewitching costume of pale sea-green silk, half covered with rich white lace, and looped up with white water-lilies; a small lily nestled in the coils of her fair hair; and with this dress, recherche and poetical, Lady Charnleigh wore a suit of magnificent emeralds.

An hour later and Lady Charnleigh sat at the head of the table. Perhaps her servants wondered why for these two gentlemen she had ordered the service of gold plate, which was usually reserved for state occasions. She knew she would have paid to few others the honor she paid to Sir Bertram.

She had received him with gracious words and kindly smiles; with them she sought to hide the vague, happy emotion that filled her heart. Paul Flemyng saw the bright blushes on the glad young face, and tried to believe they were for him.

"You have some grand old pictures, I am told, Lady Charnleigh," said Sir Bertram; "may I ask you to show them to me?"

"Nothing would please me better," she said; "after dinner we will go through the gallery. Ethel, you are always talking of pictures—will you join us with Capt. Flemyng? I like the gallery better than any part of Crown Leighton."

So after dinner they went. Lady Fanshawe declined to accompany them.

"You must know every picture well, considering the time you spend among them, Lady Charnleigh," she said. And one or two of her hearers were quite as well pleased that she should remain where she was.

Few private mansions in England could boast of a picture gallery so magnificent as that of Crown Leighton. It was large, lofty and superbly decorated. In some places the walls are inlaid with mirrors; the ceilings had been painted by Le Brun; the windows formed deep bays that were carpeted with crimson cloth; and Sir Bertram, who had an artist's eye for color, thought he had never seen a fairer picture than that of Lady Charnleigh, with her robes of green silk and lace sweeping the floor. How well the artistic, picturesque dress suited her! How royally beautiful she looked in those shining emeralds!

"You will be my cicerone," he said. "I suppose Captain Flemyng knows all the glories of Crown Leighton."

The girl turned to the young soldier with a look of genuine frankness and regret on her face.

"You are generous not to hate me," she said, "when you see all that I have robbed you of."

"You have given me more than you have taken from me," he returned; and both look and words were so much pain to Ethel Dacre.

There was no lack of conversation among the four; they were all art-lovers; they knew most of the world's famous pictures; they could criticise and compare. Leonie, Lady Charnleigh, showed perhaps the greatest and most cultivated taste.

They lingered long in the gallery, while the western sunbeams came through the long windows and lighted up the gorgeous colors on the wall; they lingered as the young and happy do, with laughing words and bright, tender thoughts. They reached the end of the gallery at last, and came to a door half hidden by the velvet curtain that hung over it.

"That is a room I have never yet entered," said Lady Charnleigh; "shall we go in now?"

"What is it? A boudoir—a study? It is just the place for an artist's studio," said Sir Bertram.

"It was the favorite room of the late Lord Charnleigh," observed the young Countess. "Mrs. Fearon tells me he used to lock himself in there, and afterward come out looking so sad and sorrowful."

"The secret of such lives as his is always a tragedy," said Paul Flemyng to Ethel. "I have often thought that the late lord of Crown Leighton had some sorrow the world knew nothing of."

It was Paul Flemyng who opened the door, and Lady Charnleigh drew back with a little shudder, the color fading from her brilliant face.

"I have such a horrible fancy," she said, with a nervous attempt at laughter; "it is when I go in I shall find the late Earl sitting in his chair with stony face and set eyes."

"You may enter safely, Lady Charnleigh," responded Paul; "the room is quite empty. Yet it looked as though it had been recently used."

"I gave orders that nothing here should be touched," said the Countess; "It seemed a kind of desecration to enter the place."

There was a book on the table, a table drawn near the fireplace, a paper knife still resting on an uncut journal.

"How strangely silent the place is! How different from the rest of the house!" said Lady Charnleigh, with a sigh. "Come away—I feel as though the room were haunted."

She turned away, but her attention was drawn to Captain Flemyng. He was standing before picture apparently engrossed by it. She called him by name; he did not hear. She moved forward and touched him on the arm, and was startled when he turned round to find his eyes full of tears. She looked at the picture; it was of a young and beautiful girl, with sad, tender eyes and a lovely mouth. A grave, noble face it was, with a veil of sadness on it—a picture that had in it a certain pathos. Underneath, in faint characters, were written the words, "Loved and Lost."

Lady Charnleigh looked first at the picture, and then at the young soldier; there was a certain resemblance in the features that struck her.

"Who is it, Captain Flemyng?" she asked, in a low voice.

"That is a portrait of my mother," he replied. "How comes it that it is hidden away here?"

"'Loved and lost,'" quoted Lady Charnleigh—"what does it mean? Who loved and who lost her?"

"I do not know," replied Captain Flemyng. "Pray pardon me, Lady Charnleigh; I did not know that you had a picture of my mother. I loved her so dearly."

"Are you sure it is your mother?" she asked.

"As sure as I am of my own existence; she always had the same sad, tender eyes, and when she smiled there was something sad in her smile. Those eyes have the same look now—do you not notice it?"

Sir Bertram and Miss Dacre had joined them, and were listening to him in wonder.

"A portrait of your mother here?" questioned Miss Dacre. "That seems strange, Captain Flemyng."

"I loved her so much," he said again; "and she died when I was quite young. Lady Charnleigh, will you grant me a great favor?"

"You know I will before you ask it," she replied.

"Permit me to have this copied. It shall be most carefully preserved."

"You shall have the original if you will, I shall be quite content with the copy."

"You are very kind to me," he said, "but I will not agree to that. You have a superstitious feeling about this room; I have the same about this picture. I should not like to take it away—it belongs to the room."

"'Loved and lost!'" murmured the young countess. "What sorrowful words! There is a story contained in them—a sad story, too. What do they mean?"

The brilliant tint had faded from her; she had grown very pale and sorrowful, the violet eyes were dim with tears—her whole aspect was changed. Sir Betram looked anxiously at her.

"You are too imaginative, Lady Charnleigh," he said. "Come away; you are growing sad and sorrowful. Come out into the sunshine."

Without a word she followed him. They went through the corridor at the end of the gallery, out on the western terrace, where the flowers were all in brilliant bloom. Paul and Ethel followed them. There, where the sun shone and the song of the birds filled the perfumed air, Lady Charnleigh was soon herself again. The exquisite rose-leaf flash stole back, the light came into her eyes.

"I have an idea," she said. "What do you think, Ethel? Shall we have a grand fete and ball here at Crown Leighton, and illuminate these grounds and gardens—a fete that will last from sunset to sunrise, and delight everybody?"

"I should like it very much," responded Miss Dacre. The two gentlemen agreed with her.

"Captain Flemyng and you, Sir Bertram, must come over to help me; it will be my first grand entertainment. Shall we begin with charades? I am so fond of charades; and we could get up such really magnificent ones. What do you say?"

"It would be delightful," said Sir Bertram, thinking of the rehearsals and the number of times that he should see Lady Charnleigh.

"What a simple, charming nature she has!" remarked Sir Bertram to himself, with a smile. "She was weeping only a few minutes since, her heart full of pity; now she is laughing at the idea of a ball. She is a perfect Undine—half grave, half gay—half child, half woman—wholly charming."

He raised his eyes in time to see the green silk and white water-lilies vanish between the trees.

"We may as well follow," said Paul Flemyng. "Lady Charnleigh is all anxiety to put her scheme at once into train; she has gone without doubt to arrange the day for the ball."

CHAPTER XXII.

"I really ought to inaugurate my reign by a grand festivity," said Lady Charnleigh. "I like to do everything en reine; if I give a ball, it shall be one to be remembered."

They were sitting in the drawing-room, and the young countess looked radiantly lovely by the light of the soft glowing lamp. They were discussing the great event.

"You have but to will and dictate," said Sir Bertram; "we shall all be pleased to obey."

"Suppose," she continued, thoughtfully, "that we commence with a dinner-party—no, that will not do—no one under forty cares about dinner. and this party shall be for the young and light-hearted. We might begin with charades and tableaux—people always enjoy them; and then at ten o'clock we could have a grand procession to the ball-room, where we might dance until morning. What do you think of that program, Ethel?"

"It will be very pleasant," said Miss Dacre. She had been watching the bright, animated expression on the girl's face, and the devoted attention of both gentlemen to her "How could I hope to charm while she is near?" she asked herself. "She is so lovely, so gay; every moment develops a new charm in her. Compared with her I am as a moth beside a butterfly."

Yet there was no envy in her heart; her admiration for the young countess was sincere and ardent; she did not know that there were people who would have preferred her quiet, spirituelle loveliness to the radiant beauty of Lady Charnleigh.

"Well, that is agreed upon," said the mistress of Crown Leighton. "We must have some good tableaux and some excellent charades; and we cannot do better than discuss now what the tableaux shall be. There are four of us here—let us each suggest a scene from some great novel, poem, or play."

"That is a wide field, Lady Charnleigh," said Paul Flemyng; "there are so many great poems and plays."

"But we each have our favorites, and can choose from them. Sir Bertram, you shall have the first choice. Ethel and I will hear what you gentlemen suggest first."

"I think one of the plays I like best is the 'Lady of Lyons,'" said Sir Bertram; "we could have a very effective tableau from that, Lady Charnleigh—the scene where the pretended prince describes his palace by the lake of Como. It is a lovely picture; the fair Paulina, with her golden hair falling round her, listening with rapt attention on her lover's arm. You would make a beautiful Paulina, Lady Charnleigh."

"But who is to be my prince?" she asked, with a blush and a smile.

"I should be most happy," began Sir Bertram, but Paul Flemyng interrupted him.

"The Prince must be dark, and you are fair, Bertram. If you will permit me, Lady Charnleigh, I will place myself at your disposal."

She was disappointed, but smiled graciously. Captain Flemyng thought to himself that he had won a great victory over his rival, for such he began to perceive Sir Bertram was.

"Now it is your turn Captain Flemyng," said the countess.

"One of the most effective I ever saw was a tableau representing Romeo and Juliet in a friar's cell."

"Ethel shall be Juliet," put in Lady Charnleigh.

"No," said Miss Dacre; "Juliet was a bright, radiant beauty. You would look the character much better than I should, Lady Charnleigh."

"Let it be so then," returned the countess. "Who is to be my Romeo?"

"Romeo was fair," said Sir Bertram, quickly; "permit me to hold the distinguished office, Lady Charnleigh?"

She smiled to hide the happiness which the bare idea gave her.

"Those will be two good scenes," she said. "Now, Ethel?"

"I am puzzled," confessed Miss Dacre; "there are so many grand poems."

"You remember the picture of Elaine, Ethel; nothing would suit you so well as that. She was watching Sir Lancelot ride away. You could assume that expression of unutterable, hopeless love; besides, your features resemble Elaine's as depicted on the canvas."

Miss Dacre smiled. One observing her keenly might have seen how wistful and tinged with pain that smile was.

"You will make me believe that I am Elaine, if you talk so much to me of her, Leonie."

"Nay," said Captain Flemyng, "it will never be your fate, Ethel, to die of a hopeless love."

The fair, spirituelle face grew a shade paler.

"I hope not," she rejoined, quiety. "It would be a terrible love that would make me lose my hold on life. It is your turn now, Leonie. What do you suggest? I think that I shall like to be Elaine."

MARTYRS TO HUMANITY.

Some Instances of the Spirit of True Scholarship.

The scene at the deathbed of Bede, the father of English history, is told with touching simplicity by his pupil Cuthbert. The closing years of the great scholar's life had been devoted to translating the Gospels from Latin into Anglo-Saxon, and he was above all things desirous of completing the translation in the hope of civilizing his wild countrymen by giving them the Gospels in their own language.

He had not completed the work when his illness grew so severe that he could no longer proceed with his writing. He then dictated to Cuthbert and his other pupils until he was on his deathbed. when there still remained untranslated the closing chapter of St. John.

"Venerable Master," said Cuthbert to the dying man. "there yet remains one chapter." "Then take your pen and write with speed," said the dying scholar. When it was done, Bede repeated the "Gloria Patri" and died. And thus we have the Anglo-Saxon gospels, the most complete record of the language and mental habits of a most remarkable people.

Over and above this, far more important than this, we have an illustration of the spirit of true scholarship, of the self-sacrifice with which so many scholars have lived and died for the advancement of cizilivation and the uplifting of humanity.

In his lessons on electricity Prof. Tyndall says that the beautiful essay on the "Formation of Dew" was written by Dr. Wells when he was on the brink of the grave. Stephen Gray continued his experiments until he was almost in articulo mortis, and when he could no longer sit up or write he dictated the account of his discoveries to others. He dictated thus to Dr. Mortimer, Secretary of the Royal Society, while dying, and the language of his description of his discoveries in the use of electric conductors and non-conductors represents his last painful gasps for breath.

The world knows little or nothing of the men who have done most for it. It is astonished at the magnificent results promised and achieved by the scientific use of electricity as a motor, but it troubles itself very little about Gray wrestling foot to foot with death for a few precious minutes to give the world the result of his painful labors.

These men who have not sought place or money or glory have civilized the world and have done all that has been done to make the conditions of human life more tolerable. Whether called Christian or not, they are true saints and martyrs of the religion of humanity.

Age of Trees.

Elm, 300 years; ivy, 335 years; maple, 516 years; larch, 576 years; orange, 630 years; cypress, 800 years; olive, 800 years; walnut, 900 years; Oriental plane, 1,000 years; lime, 1,100 years; spruce, 1,200 years; oak, 1,500 years; cedar, 2,000 years; yew, 3,200 years. The way in which the ages of these trees have been ascertained leaves no doubt of its correctness. In some few cases the data has been furnished by historical records and by traditions, but the botanical archæologists have a resource independent of either, and, when carefully used, infallible.

Of all the forms of nature, trees alone disclose their ages candidly and freely. In the stems of trees which have branches and leaves with netted veins—in all exogens, as the botanist would say—the increase takes place by means of an annual deposit of wood, spread in an even layer upon the surface of the preceding one.

In the earlier periods of life trees increase much faster than when adult—the oak, for instance, grows more rapidly between the twentieth and thirtieth years—and when old the annual deposits considerably diminish, so that the strata are thinner and the rings proportionately closer. Some trees slacken in rate of growth at a very early period of life, and layers of oak become thinner after 40, those of the elm after 50, those of the yew after 60.

A Bit of a Boy.

There was never a smile in a weary while,
And never a gleam of joy,
Till his eyes of light made the whole world bright—
A little bit of a boy!

He came one day when the world was May
And thrilling with life and joy;
And with all the roses he seemed to play—
A little bit of a boy!

But he played his part with a human heart,
And time can never destroy
The memory sweet of the pattering feet
Of that little bit of a boy!

We had wondered how he could play all day
With never a dream of rest;
But once he crept in the dark and slept
Still on his mother's breast!

* * * * *

There was never a smile in a weary while,
And never a gleam of joy;
But the world seems dim since we dreamed of him—
A little bit of a boy!

How Bertha Did It.

"Five lovely white kittens, and mamma says they must all be drowned!" Bertha cried about it. The twins, Cora and Clarence, cried too. Walter looked gloomy, and little Jamie wiped his eyes on his pinafore. "Why? Why? Why?" wailed the chorus. "Because," said mamma, firmly, "it is the most merciful thing to do. We can't keep five cats; and I'm sure you don't wish to give up old Tabby even for one of her kittens. It is better to drown them while they are little than to send them away to be starved or neglected." "Wait till they get just a little bigger, and let me try to find homes for them," begged Bertha. "Well, you may try it," said mamma.

So, after a few weeks, Bertha wrote five little notes. This is what each one said: "I am a poor, little, homeless kitten. Please give me a morsel of milk and a corner of the hearth to sleep." One note was signed "Snow," one "Snowflake," one "Snow White," one "Snowdrop," and one "Snowball." "People will know that's each one's name," said Bertha.

Then she tied the note around each kitten's neck with a pretty ribbon. One day Bertha took a walk, with five kittens in a basket; and when she came back the basket was empty. "I left Snow at old Mrs. Gray's," she said, Old Mr. and Mrs. Gray have nothing to amuse them, so I guess they will keep Snow. I took Snowflake to Mrs. King's door. Jimmy King is lame and I'm sure he will be glad to see Snowflake. I put Snowdrop into Miss Spinster's window. It was open. There isn't a soul in the house besides her, and Snowdrop'll be splendid company. I left Snowball in the yard of the house where the two pairs of twins live at the end of the road. If they only wont pull her tail! Then I stopped at Aunt Susie's for a drink of water. And I told her all about it; and she laughed, and said she'd keep Snow White herself. Snow White's the prettiest." And, strange to say, the kittens did really find a welcome and good home just where Bertha's loving hands had left them.

The Business Was Stopped.

Catherine had been indulging in a drink of milk during the night for so long, that, when about three years of age and visiting friends, her parents decided that her crying and persistence in wanting the milk, which was then so inconvenient to procure, had become decidedly a nuisance. A few days later she was left with her grandparents, while her father and mother went to New York. Some plan had been decided upon between her mamma and grandmamma, by which the little lady's proclivity for night imbibing should be abolished. As soon as her mamma was gone, her grandmamma said: "Now, Catherine, we are going to stop this milk business and this night business," and added a few more words emphasizing the proposed amendment.

All passed serenely, and in about ten days her mamma returned. She found her little daughter, with a small tin cup of water and a tiny rag, busily occupied in attempts to wash a porch some thirty feet long by twelve or fifteen feet wide. On hearing her mother's voice, she merely raised her head from the spot she was so busily scouring, and exclaimed in the most cheerful manner: "Oh, mamma! We've sthoped thith milk bithness, and thith night business!"

A Troubled Conscience.

The boy was in bed, but not asleep. He tossed about and sighed. Presently he sat up and listened to the music from the room below. His mother had a party, and his sister had been allowed to sit up, though he had been sent to bed at the usual hour. But that was not the cause of the boy's trouble. "Mudder must have forgotten," he said, presently. He sat thinking for some time; then he rose and scrambled out of bed. He tried to put on his clothes, but his nurse had always dressed him, and he could not manage the fastenings. He did not like to appear in public without an extra garment; so he put on his overcoat, and, grasping the tail of his long night-dress with one hand, and holding his coat closed with the other, he made his way down stairs to the drawing-room.

His mother was singing, "The Lover and the Bird," but at the sound of partly suppressed exclamations from the guests she turned round on the piano stool and beheld her son. "Mudder," said the boy, hastening to her side; "mudder, my odder clothes is not on because dose buttons don't fit. But truly I did have to come down, mudder, for you said, you said, you would spank me at bedtime, and—and, I don't want my own mudder to say a fib. But, mudder, I comed down and toled you, and—and—don't you fink you better spank soft?"

THE more independent of accidents, the more self-subsistent; the more fraught with internal resources, the greater the character.

HOPE paints only in the bright colors.

SAVED THE MARINE BAND.

Carter Harrison's Famous Speech in Congress Against False Economy.

When Carter Harrison was a member of Congress he did a service for the Marine Band for which not only the members of that popular organization but the whole population of Washington have ever since held him in grateful remembrance. It was the purpose of the record-making economists to cut off entirely the proposed and customary appropriation for the band. Had they succeeded the band would have been compelled to disband. Just on the verge of the economists, Congressmen Harrison rose in his place and spoke as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, for fifteen long, dreary years at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue the White House has been occupied by a Republican and during the winter months of evenings the Marine Band has been up there to discourse sweet music for the delectation of a Republican President and the delectation of his Republican friends. At every reception a Republican President has stood in a certain room receiving his guests, and his pet Republican friends in white vests and white cravats have stood behind him enjoying the dulcet tones poured forth from the silver throats of silvered instruments by twenty-four gentlemen in scarlet coats. For long years, of summer Saturday afternoons, twenty-four gentlemen in scarlet coats have caused twenty-four silvered instruments on the green in front of the White House to belch forth martial music for the delectation of a Republican President and his Republican friends.

"On the 4th of next March, sir, there will be a Democratic President in the White House. Sir, is the Democratic President to have no music? * * *

"But they wish to abolish the Marine Band. Think of this being done, Democrats, before a Democratic President goes into his position! We have many men who, we feel, are fit to fill that position. In my mind's eye I see them now marching on from St. Louis to the White House. Let me name them as they come in sight. They come first from the East."

Mr. Harrison then described in a humorous way, without giving names, the various Democrats then looming up as Democratic candidates. Continuing, he said:

"Then, sir, there is still another, the great unknown, coming 10,000 strong from every part of the Union, the great unknown of the Democratic party."

There were questions as to the identity of the unknown from all sides of the chamber and Mr. Milliken suggested that perhaps delicacy prevented Mr. Harrison from naming him.

"Yes, sir, delicacy and modesty prevent me from calling names. Sir, when the great unknown gets here shall he have no music; shall no tunes come from those twenty-four silvered instruments, blown out by those twenty-four gentlemen in red coats, to welcome him to the White House? Shall we have no music when we introduce him to the American people? Not by my vote; never, never, never!"

When the vote was taken, a few minutes after, the members, whose sides were still aching from the laughter that this speech had caused, gave Mr. Harrison their support until the result was yeas 25, nays, 70, and the Marine Band was saved.

A night or so later the band serenaded Mr. Harrison at his residence and he made them a speech, beginning "Gentlemen of the brass band." which was quite as humorous as that delivered in the House, but which unfortunately has not been preserved.

A Boom in Whitewash.

A missionary stationed at one of the South Sea Islands determined to give his residence a coat of whitewash. To obtain this, in the absence of lime, coral was reduced to powder by burning. The natives watched the process of burning with interest, believing that the coral was cooked for them to eat. Next morning they beheld the missionary's cottage glittering in the rising sun white as snow. They danced, they sang, they screamed with joy. The whole island was confusion. Whitewash became the rage. Happy was the coquette who could enhance her charms by a daub of the white brush. Contentions arose. One party urged their superior rank; another obtained possession of the brush and valiantly held it against all comers; a third tried to upset the tub to obtain some of the cosmetic. To quiet the hubbub more whitewash was made, and in a week not a hut, a domestic utensil, a war club, nor a garment but was as white as snow; not an inhabitant but had his skin painted with grotesque figures; not a pig that was not whitened; and mothers might be seen in every direction capering joyously and yelling with delight in the contemplation of the superior beauty of their whitewashed babes.—Missionary Chronicle.

He Did.

"Oh, Mr. Johones," gushed the soulful young woman, "I am only a dabbler in literature myself, but I think I can comprehend something of the spirit that animates its devotees. Do you not sometimes feel an irresistible prompting, an overmastering, unconquerable impulse to write, write, write, that will not be stifled until you have poured out your thoughts on paper?"

"Often, Miss Gahush," replied the struggling young author; "often. When you're reduced to your last hunk of German sausage, and you know you've got to grind out a poem, an essay, a story, or starve, you feel that irresistible prompting, Miss Gahush, till you can't rest!"

THE Emperor Francis Joseph has made over the house and grounds at Meyerling, which belonged to his son, the unfortunate Crown Prince Rudolph, to the Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis of Assissium. It is estimated to be worth 1,000,000 florins. A sum of 150,000 florins is put at the disposal of the nuns on condition that they will keep up an almonry for twelve men beyond work.

Testimonial.

When Mrs. J. H. St. Clair, of Hawley, Kansas, was back a year or two ago, she bought a Swing Washer of Mr. Meese. This last summer Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pommert, of this place, spent part of the summer with Mr. St. Clair's family, Mr. S., being a brother of Mrs. Pommert. The two ladies used the washing machine, and Mrs. Pommert became as enthusiastic over it, as was Mrs. St. Clair, and on her return to Auburn, she got one of her own, and uses it each week. Both ladies agree that it does its work quicker, better and is much pleasanter to work with, than any other machine. As it is closed, the steam does not escape to drench the walls, or to heat up the person, making it more pleasant to hang out the clothes. Both ladies authorize us to say that no washer they ever tried is equal to the Auburn Swing Washer. It is easy to operate and does its work quickly.

THE AUBURN COURIER
JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.
Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.
THURSDAY.....DECEMBER 7, 1893.

KENDALLVILLE fair will now buy the land they have been occupying. It will cost about $8,000.

UTAH, Arizona and New Mexico are asking admission as states. Republicans will oppose this, as the new states are likely to be democratic. Democrats, however, voted to admit half a dozen republican territories four or five years ago.

Q. A. HOSSLER, for over thirty years connected with the Indianian at Warsaw, died last week. He was one of the most popular newspaper men in the state, an able business man, and in every way prominent among the fraternity of which he had been a life-long member. Especially will he be missed by the Northern Indiana Editorial Association, of which he was one of the founders.

NOT A MAN of all the republican editors who write so glibly about the bad character of the queen of the Sandwich Islands knows a thing about it. Harper's Weekly, a journal of the highest respectability, with a high character for fairness and truth, speaks in her favor. It says she is a woman of good character and attainments, being better educated than the average American woman. She has quite a literary taste and is author of many of the hymns and the music used in the christian churches out there.

TALKING with an Allen county democrat the other day we find they are beginning to talk up their county political matters already. While it seems early to us in DeKalb, yet we believe Allen county has generally started the campaign much sooner than we. The people we met are naturally from the north part of Allen, the part nearest to DeKalb and they are especially interested in getting a commissioner to suit them. This is their second district, and they have decided to ask the democracy of old Allen to make one of their neighbors its commissioner. Wm. W. Treace will be pushed for the place, and we know of no worthier or fitter man in that section. Mr. Treace has grown up with the country in his section, has conquered a good farm from the wilderness, and has made a success of all he has undertaken. While we are aware that the people there, not here, must settle this question, we think Mr. Treace's neighbors have the right idea, and that he would be a most excellent man for the place, and a valuable one to the interests of his section of the county.

Illuminated Lecture.

See the posters. Saturday evening at Presbyterian church at 7:30, by Prof. Johnson, subject: "From Eden to Calvary and Beyond," and a series of grand pictures and lessons on these famed scenes. Admission, 20 cents; children, 10 cents. He shows 60 magnificent stereopticon views. The same afternoon at 3:30 he gives a matinee for children and all others, at 10 cents. This is a series of photographic views with the stereopticon, of the "World's Fair." Those who saw the fair and those who did not should see this.

The Candy Factory.

Thomas Brothers opened their candy factory to the public last Saturday evening and there was soon a crowd that filled up all the available space. Some were buying more or less of the sweet product, and all were admiring the tempting display made of the nice, fresh candies, caramels, taffies, etc, etc., exposed to view in every direction. In the rear rooms, the factory proper, the work of making the various sorts had been going on all day, and was still going on to a greater or less extent. And all the evening a crowd kept coming and going, sampling and admiring. It was really an admirable display and the firm should have credit for their enterprise. They expect to drive this business and put their goods on sale everywhere, at least in all the available points in this territory. They will wholesale to all dealers and keep them stocked with a choice line of fresh goods. We hope to see them and their new enterprise succeed.

May Return to Auburn.

Oliver Ensley was home over Sunday. He reports the people at Indianapolis as all well. He says they still hold the fort at the State Pension office, and do not know when a change is to be made. He is of the opinion that Col. Zollinger will be the new man, and speaks in highest terms of Col. Zollinger's ability and fitness. It will be remembered that Col. Zollinger held the position during Cleveland's first term. This all reminds us that Oliver P. Ensley will be a prominent name in the next republican state state convention. He will be a candidate for the nomination for clerk of the supreme court. While he is a republican and the editor of this paper is a democrat, that does not prevent our saying that he is a young man of merit and ability, and would, if elected to that office, fill it with credit to himself and his party, as well as to the state. While we do not believe the republicans will carry the state next year, they will no doubt find it to their interest to put up good men, and from this end of the state it looks as if he would be chosen for that honor. He has for four years, been his father's chief clerk and confidential assistant in the Indiana State pension office, one of the most important in the country, and this will prove a valuable schooling to any position he may here after secure. We believe he was up here, partly with a view to see the outlook for some business opening when they are done with the pension office at Indianapolis.

CHALLENGED!

During the Month of December, and right in the presence of

JACK FROST,

We Challenge the Whole Country to meet the Slaughtering Prices we are offering on MEN'S and BOYS' CLOTHING. We purpose to make this Challenge Sale the important one of our retail career. The price on every article in the house, including Men's, Boys' and Children's Suits, Overcoats, Hats, Caps and Furnishing Goods, will be reduced during this Challenge Sale, which involves a loss of money to us. But, no matter, we have the goods and must dispose of them, so take advantage of the tempting prices we will give you during the sale. We challenge all of them to meet us in quality and low prices. The Bargain Counter and the Special Sale are not in it with this great Challenge Sale.

Cats Among the Egyptians.

The tutelar deity of cats was Diana, and according to Plutarch the cat was not only sacred to the moon, but was an emblem of it. Hence cats were treated with peculiar consideration in the land of the Pharaohs, the death of one being regarded as a great family misfortune. Egyptian cat funerals were celebrated with the greatest pomp and ceremony, their late owners showing respect by shaving off their eyebrows and wearing sackcloth for nine days. In the time of Moses it was a capital crime to kill a cat, and we are told by Diodorus how a Roman soldier who killed one was tried, sentenced and finally put to death.—St. Louis Republic.

The Rattlesnake's Rattles.

It is an error to suppose that rattles are shed each year as are the horns of the deer, or that a new rattle is added each time the skin is shed. A friend of mine owned a massasauga over one year, and while the skin was exfoliated the rattles remained intact and without additions. Men who owned rattlesnakes of the diamond species in Florida informed me that an adult might add one or two rattles—that is, sections to the rattle—in a year, or again not any, and that the changing of the skin exfoliation had nothing to do with the new formation. All agreed that the older rattlers of the south were provided, as a rule, with a longer rattle than the young ones. Said one man, pointing to six specimens of the diamond rattlesnake (Crotalus adamanteus) about sixteen inches long and possessed of a single rattle and button, as the terminal and growing portion is called:

"Those little rattlers were born in this house, and when they were a few weeks old I mounted them as you see them."—Dr. Morris Gibbs in Forest and Stream.

Our First Tariff.

Republican orators are fond of telling us that Republican protection is the "American system." As a matter of fact, such a system existed in Europe before America was discovered, and the constitution of the United States as framed by the forefathers, and fortunately still exists, prohibits the laying of protective tariff by one state of the Union against another. The forefathers were wisely determined that no such restrictions should trammel the infant interstate commerce of the American Union.

But Republicans point with triumph to the fact that a tariff act was passed by the first congress. True, but there was little or no Republican protection in that tariff. Of 71 enumerated articles 43 came in under an ad valorem duty varying from 5 per cent. to 15 per cent., and the greater part of these 43 articles was brought in under a duty of less than 10 per cent., while many came in at 7½ per cent, and 5 per cent. Luxuries were taxed at the highest rate, and many articles of necessity, including wool, were free of duty.

If ever American industries needed Republican protection they needed it then, for most of them were infants in fact as well as in name. But the monstrous theory embodied in the McKinley law had few friends among early patriots, and, fortunately for this country, Republican protection did not lay its heavy hand upon our industries until they had grown great enough to prosper even in spite of such adverse legislation.

Depew's Tribute to Cleveland.

Chauncey M. Depew's famous speech introducing Mr. Cleveland at a banquet in New York on Oct. 9, 1890, deserves to be reproduced now to show what a leading Republican orator thought of the Democratic candidate when he was not the standard bearer of his party. Here is what he said:

"If I were asked to name the most forceful character in American life, the man who best represents the energy, the unswerving determination and the courage of the true American; the man who knows duty, and it alone, when public service commands it; the man who wars in war and is for peace in peace, I would name General W. T. Sherman. But if I am to name the typical American, the man who loves and believes in his country beyond everything else; the man who, determining once in what direction his duty leads, cannot be swerved from the path—the man who is doggedly persistent in what he believes to be right—the man who thinks not of self, but of his country and its needs, I would name Grover Cleveland.

"What he has accomplished is the very highest attribute to the possibilities of American citizenship. A country lawyer in the city of Buffalo, he shed luster upon the high profession which he had chosen. As the mayor of his native city he presented as his record a clean and economical administration. Coming into the highest position in the land without previous experience, and with scarcely a precedent to guide him in the conditions which surrounded him, he won the affection of his party, and commanded the respect and admiration of his opponents. I find myself in one of the proudest positions of my life in being permitted to present to you Grover Cleveland as the typical American."

And it was Depew who nominated Harrison at Minneapolis.

Simon Hoisington, of Chicago, and his brother, E. P. Hoisington, of Newville, have been here a few days, being called here by the serious illness of their father, H. H. Hoisington. He had a stroke of paralysis about a week ago, but is now improving, with bright hopes for full recovery.

Mr. Joel Treesh, near Corunna, reports his boy Clark, who had his jaw broken by a kick from a horse, as doing well. The fracture was a serious one and could not be controlled by ordinary means. Finally the dentist, Dr. H. Darling, of Auburn, was consulted and he has succeeded in setting the jaw and retaining it in proper position.

The St. Joe News was temporarily suspended last week to make an adjustment, Mr. Williams resigning his position as editor and publisher. This suspension is not permanent, as M. E. Olds, the former editor and publisher intimates that the publication of that bright and newsy sheet will continue after a very short time. We hope to see it succeed.

Postmaster Bicknell Robbed.

H. M. Bicknell, postmaster at Garrett, was robbed at about 8:30 p. m. Saturday. He had closed up and taken the money, stamps, etc., in a tin box, and with his wife started for home. When near his door four men attacked him, knocked him down and got the box. Mrs Bicknell screamed, but the robbers thrust a mitten into her mouth and she was covered by a revolver. After getting the box the thieves escaped. They got about $300. Sunday it was thought they had been traced to Walkerton and thence to Laporte. At Laporte three men were arrested, and on Monday Deputy Blum and Henry West, of this place, and Marshal Dare, of Garrett, went up and got them. When they got to Walkerton coming home, they had learned enough to show that two of the men at least were not the men wanted, and let those two go. The other, Wm. Morehouse, was brought back to Auburn as it is believed he had been engaged in the robbing of cars at Garrett.

"I AM a good deal like the thermometer," said the reformed drinker. "How so?" "Because it will be a cold day when I take another drop."

WHETHER the president of the college or the captain of the foot-ball team is the greater man remains an open question in educational circles.

THE fruits of the earth do not more obviously require labor and cultivation to prepare them for our own use and subsistence than our faculties demand instruction.

HE who does not respect confidence will never find happiness in his path. The belief in virtue vanishes from his heart, the source of noble actions becomes extinct in him.

WHEN a man speaks the truth in the spirit of truth, his eye is as clear as the heavens. When he has base ends, and speaks falsely, the eye is muddy, and sometimes asquint.

PROF. GARNER, after a sojourn in Africa, visiting monkeys and learning their language, is back, and reports that monkeys do talk and have a language. He, however, doesn't yet acknowledge to being well up in the Simian. He says the gorilla and the chimpanzee are not on speaking terms—not that they are open enemies or filled with jealousies, but they don't use the same text books.

HE who in the pride of supposed innocence gathers his skirts away from the touch of the erring and guilty and leaves them to their fate is as cruel and uncharitable as were the priest and the Levite who, seeing their fellow-traveler lying wounded and bleeding, "passed by on the other side." Whatever may be his fancied superiority, he himself is on the downward road as regards charity and kindliness, and needs humbly to turn from the error of his ways.

THE "Nictheroy," as "El Cid" is hereafter to be called, will be watched with great interest if she enters into the naval operations in support of President Peixoto, when she reaches Brazilian waters. For in everything except her colors she is one of the most American ships ever equipped for fighting. Her captain is a Cape Cod mariner. His mates and lieutenants are graduates of our naval schools. The Hotchkiss guns and the dynamite hurlers are peculiarly American. The country will expect important things of the Nictheroy, and is not likely to be disappointed.

OBSTINATE Muley Hassan, who says of himself: "I am the King of Kings and the Prince of Paradise," is accepting war with Spain with a light heart. Muley is doomed to a great awakening. The shroud of Islam will be rent in twain, and the Spanish Socialists will dissolve the fierce theological schools of Fez, and set up their cunning councils in their stead. The captain-general and the "sereno" will maintain law and order where now there is tyranny and feudalism. And meantime a Franco-Russian squadron is preparing to manifest at the mouth of the Dardanelles. Verily, the isolation of Islam is over.

THERE is no cause for regret in the fact that the big New York Central engine 999 and the English locomotive Queen Empress did not race from Buffalo to New York. The race would have been unsatisfactory. Aside from the fact that the English machine was new and untried, the road was unfamiliar to the British engineer, and it would have scarcely been possible to secure conditions to make the race a fair one. If the American engine had won the cry from the Britons would have been that their locomotive was not in racing trim, and the result would be unsatisfactory all around. The bad grace with which our English friends took the defeat of the Valkyrie is a sufficient warning against entering into any contests with them unless the advantage—if there is any—shall be on their side. John Bull is becoming a hard loser, and the only way to shut him up is to give him odds and then beat him into the bargain.

IF Chief Brennan's Chicago janizaries will enforce vigorously the order issued in reference to reckless drivers they may have whatever they ask for. The tyranny exercised over pedestrians by cabmen, truckmen and drivers of vehicles generally is monstrous, and would not be tolerated in any other city on earth. The Chicago man who would escape being knocked down and run over by teams must be a high-class sprinter and dodger, and as for women their only hope is Providence. On the downtown crossings the reckless and homicidal jehus are kept in order by the Central detail police, but away from the business district it is every man for himself and the bakery wagon catch the hindmost. If the police want to make themselves popular let them yank a few hundred insolent drivers from their seats, and if they can find a reasonable excuse for clubbing the heads off a few of them so much the better.

WHEN Chief Brennan's minions have brought the Chicago cabbies and expressmen to their senses for criminally headlong driving let them turn once more to the peddlers who streak the pale air with cries that madden invalids and make strong men and women sick. The nuisance of street yelling had become slightly abated; but with cold weather the hawkers of vegetables and fruits seem to think it necessary to howl more loudly than ever in order to be heard through closed doors and barred windows. City people temporarily visiting a country village, find much in bucolic scenes to excite their visibilities, and still more in rustic customs to shock their sense of propriety and arouse a feeling of pity for the countryman's benighted ignorance. But it is certain that no country village would endure a nuisance one-half as outrageous as is borne without protest, and apparently with helplessness, by the residents of any city, in the shape of reckless drivers, yelling newsboys, howling hucksters, and gibbering banana peddlers.

CHICAGO HERALD: What is commonly, but inaccurately, termed the overproduction of girls is scaring some of the sociologists and reformers again. It is asserted that the excess of women over men is an alarming and abnormal feature of modern civilization. As a matter of fact, it is nothing of the sort. The women have always outnumbered the men and probably always will. In the earlier history of the world sanguinary and interminable wars kept the male population from increasing rapidly. Whisky, cigarettes, late hours and rapid living are doing the same thing now. As for the women composing the so-called surplus, they are not in need of any one's pity. They are getting along first-rate. Some of them are unmarried from choice; others because they can't get husbands. Both classes are to be congratulated. The average woman can make a living as well as the average man can, and when she is paddling her own canoe she takes no chances of having to endure a male animal who drinks whisky, chews tobacco and won't take a bath once in six months. No one need cry over the spinsters.

AN expedition recently started from the United States for South America whose object is to scour tropical forests for brilliant plumaged birds to adorn women's headgear. It is bad enough to see a delicate-faced female with the skin of some little animal disfiguring her throat, but it is worse to look at her hat and behold the externals of the carcasses of slaughtered birds. It is suggestive of a cruel disposition and at war with marriage. The London Times has entered the field with a strong protest against feathered females, and calls attention to the extermination of several species of the beautiful birds, many of them songbirds in Great Britain, all Europe and the United States. Herbert Spencer holds that women do not progress so fast as men—indeed, are very far behind men; but what are we to think of his idea when the male sex form a company to slaughter birds that females may be adorned with the remains? Out upon such progress! While on the bird subject, attention may as well be called to the cruel little cages of song birds and others of plumed beauty, which are scarcely capacious enough for a mouse. We have all sorts of humane societies, but nobody protects birds against the devilish meanness of man in thus torturing their little lives out of them.

THERE is a larger scope for an organization of women than that outlined by Miss Octavia Bates, of Detroit, in her plan to promote and protect the interests of women at World's Fairs. Real international expositions are held at long intervals. Probably one in ten years is within the average, although exhibitions claiming but not deserving the prefix international are held oftener. Merely to conserve the interests of women at expositions held ten years apart would scarcely justify the formation of an organization. Indeed, such an organization would of necessity be little else than a name. It would lack cohesiveness because it would be without a tangible object. A great society of women, however, one formed to redress the wrongs and maintain the right of women—that is, a women's rights society in its highest sense—would have an ever-present object in view. It need have nothing to do with politics; its members could wear their hair long or short as they pleased. Its mission would be to protect and assist women who through poverty, misfortune or accident need protection and assistance. Such a society would have a mission which would commend itself to women and men of all nations, and its formation would be one of the many happy results of the World's Fair.

Eccentric Abner Kirby.

The late Abner Kirby, of Milwaukee, was a man of many eccentricities of character. As a landlord he puzzled his guests by naming his rooms instead of numbering them, and a newcomer was frequently startled at the order given the bell-boy to "show the gentleman up to Gehenna." Though fond of ardent spirits, he swore in 1876 that he would not take another drink until Tilden was elected, and he did not. During the sixties he lost $500,000 in wheat and later made $150,000 in thirty days in the same kind of speculation. One afternoon soon after this he tossed $50,000 in bills in his wife's lap, as she sat in the hotel parlor, and said: "Here, mammy, go and pay off the mortgage." His clothing was invariably made of imported Scotch goods, and as he always wore his clothes until they had become threadbare, they were in strange contrast with the big diamond in his necktie.

CRANKISM as a plea for assassination is played out. Guiteau found it so.

NEW TARIFF BILL.

ITS PRINCIPAL FEATURES ARE EXCELLENT.

Necessaries of Life Cheapened, Free Raw Materials to the Front, Bounties and Subsidies to the Rear—The Bill Should Be Hurried Through.

A Commendable Measure.

The Ways and Means tariff bill, which will probably be known as the Wilson bill, is, on the whole, a satisfactory response to the demands of the country. The Democratic administration and the Democratic majorities in the two houses of Congress were chosen to give relief from the high taxation imposed by the McKinley act, and this bill is the response to the country's desire.

The first, because the most universal, demand was that the necessaries of life should be made cheaper to the people by the abolition of taxes on the materials used by American manufacturers and on the tools of agriculture and trade. The bill is fully satisfactory in this respect. In making the additions to the free list the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee have risen above selfish considerations. They have refused to heed the protests and outcries of protected interests in their own districts. This is especially true of the Chairman of the committee, whose district contains many coal and iron mines, and whose constituents clamored loudly against the abolition of the tariff taxes on coal and on iron ore. But the duties on coal and on iron ore are an annual tax on manufacturers of more than $1,750,000, and have closed up many furnaces and iron and steel mills in New England. Cheap ore and pig iron lie at the basis of our industries, and Mr. Wilson and his associates have sought the good of the whole.

With the taxes removed from these articles, there is every reason to believe, from the present state of the metal market, that American iron masters will soon control the iron and steel trade of the world. In the not remote future the West Virginians, Pennsylvanians, and Alabamians themselves will find free ore and coal beneficial.

The remainder of the free list additions are directly for the relief of the people who are bearing the more serious burdens of the present tariff. Not only are wools made free, but the tax on wearing apparel is also repealed. Clothes are to be cheaper. Fuel, lumber, stone and structural iron that go into houses, the tools of the mechanic, the machinery and implements of the farmer are to be made cheaper. The monopolies that were fostered by the taxes on cotton ties and binding twine are to have their hold on their victims loosened. Sham reciprocity, which, untaxing foreigners only, has raised the price of coffee and extended the area of protection under the pretense of granting relief to commerce, is to be abandoned.

The bounty on sugar is to be withdrawn gradually, and the tax on refined sugar is to be reduced. The most disappointing feature of the new bill is the sugar schedule. Most Democrats will say that the bounty ought to have been taken away at once, for such a tax is directly hostile to American institutions and especially to Democratic principles. Many difficulties, however, stood in the way of radical treatment. The sugar growers of the country protested against being suddenly left stripped of all protection. They argued that this would be discrimination against them; that while other protected interests were to have their favors withdrawn gradually it was proposed to cut off the sugar bounty at once and after the growers had arranged their business with reference to it. In order to satisfy these people and their representatives in Congress, who were for the bill otherwise, the plan of gradual withdrawal of the bounty was adopted. It is a compromise concerning which something can be said on both sides. The reduction of the rate on refined sugars will be a blow at the trust, but not a serious one.

The bill generally is excellent. It has been prepared with great care and entire conscientiousness. It goes very far, perhaps as far as it is possible to go at once, toward a complete fulfillment of Democratic pledges. When it passes and becomes a law, a new and brighter era will begin for American commerce.—New York World.

Immediate Tariff Reduction.

The following quotations are from A. Augustus Healy's article, in the December Forum, entitled, "Necessity for Immediate Tariff Reduction:"

"The present time is most opportune for changing the tariff. The financial panic through which we have passed, with its attendant disaster and suffering, has furnished a golden opportunity for putting a new tariff into effect with the least possible displacement and loss.

"The great majority of manufacturers are not at all afraid of a lower tariff. It will in reality be a great boon to them. But they are extremely impatient to know what it is to be in all its details.

"The new tariff should be put into effect as soon as possible, in order that it may have time to vindicate itself and establish itself in the favor of the people before the Congressional elections of 1894. The permanency of the reform may be involved in having this done.

"I have every confidence that a wise tariff law, such as we may reasonably expect at the hands of the present Ways and Means Committee, if put into operation by the 1st of January, 1894, will find great favor in the eyes of the people before the Congressional elections of next year, and will continue to give universal satisfaction, until, with general consent, the business of the country shall be prepared for a further reduction of duties; thus repeating the history of the low Walker tariff of 1846, which, having brought prosperity to the country during a period of ten years, was further reduced in 1857. Mr. Blaine tells us in his 'History' that 'this act (the tariff of 1857) was well received by the people, and, indeed, was concurred in by a considerable proportion of the Republican party.'

"It seems clear to me that to postpone the revision of the tariff is to postpone the revival of prosperity by introducing uncertainty, as a constant element, in a large class of industries. On the other hand, the prompt passage of a new tariff bill would clear up all doubt; business would at once adapt itself to new conditions; our merchants and manufacturers would have courage and confidence to undertake new and large enterprises, and with a more liberal commercial policy, it is probable that we should at once enter upon a long course of business prosperity.

"The people of the United States are inclined to favor that party which is able to accomplish results. They desire prompt action on the part of their representatives in carrying into effect needed legislation."

One National Republican Opinion.

While the free-listing of these and other articles reduces the revenues about twenty-two millions, it is better, the revenue question apart, that some of them should be duty free. This is the case with wool, for reasons which this paper has stated repeatedly. The removal of the duty on lumber will be followed by increased importations from Canada, but the destruction of the American forests, which has been progressing so rapidly, will be checked. The tariff protection of those forests has contributed to their untimely destruction. That free iron ore will injure the iron-ore men of the United States may well be questioned. What the effect of the removal of the duty on coal will be time will show.—Chicago Tribune.

Taxes According to Value.

It is plain that the ad valorem or "according to value" style of duty is much more equitable than the fixed or specific style of duty. Rich people naturally like the specific style of duty more than they like the other, as under it they are not required to pay their proper share of taxation. It is to the great advantage of the poorer classes to have ad valorem duties on everything, as then they are not required to pay their own share of taxation and a considerable slice of the rich men's share as well. The inferior qualities of goods which poor people buy are not any longer to be taxed two, three or four times as highly as the fine qualities of goods in the same line which millionaires buy.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Understands His Business.

George A. Macbeth, a lamp chimney manufacturer of Pittsburg, talks like a man of courage, enterprise and American spirit of the new tariff bill. "There has been too much tariff," he says, "on glassware. If it were taken off altogether it would be a good thing, which other manufacturers cannot see now, but will later. Without a tariff on the finished product the markets of the world would be open to us. We care nothing in our business for foreign competition. Labor-saving machinery, skilled workmen and all the natural benefits we possess give the Americans an advantage in manufacturing which no other country possesses." That is the American spirit which wins and conquers.

Tax the Incomes.

THERE are no sound reasons advanced sufficient to justify the defeat of this species of taxation.—Nashville American.

IT is just, will keep down discontent among people on whom taxation is a burden and will make the rich more secure in their property holdings.—Washington (Ga.) Chronicle.

THE income tax is opposed by many of the "goldbugs" upon the ground that it is inquisitorial, but as all taxes are inquisitorial and burdensome this argument should not prevent the lawmakers from placing it upon the statute books.—Bangor Commercial.

OUR Consul at Chemnitz finds that the income tax in Saxony has worked very successfully, and that in the main it has yielded safe and certain results, with little loss and less complaint. It would be our own fault if we were not to make our income tax popular.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

WE need the income tax to make good the deficiency in the Treasury now existing and likely to continue, and we need it because it tends to equalize taxation. Under the present system taxes are so unequally distributed that the wealthy bondholder may escape while his poor neighbor pays more than his just part.—Atlanta Constitution.

Hurry the Bill Through.

LET the tariff bill become a law before Mr. Cleveland's first year in office expires.—St. Louis Republic.

THE Wilson bill ought to pass both branches of Congress without material modification or unnecessary delay.—Kansas City Star.

SINCE the tariff must be changed, the one imperative duty is to perfect the change as promptly as possible. Some business must be done in the meantime, but no large engagements can be entered into until all these questions are settled.—Philadelphia Times.

THE Wilson bill, which is destined to supersede the iniquitous McKinley measure, is now ready for the action of Congress. Rush it through with a whirl, gentlemen, and if there is any attempt at blockading in the Senate, just send for David B. Hill.—Chicago Times.

THE tariff bill is ready for Congress, and the people are ready for the tariff bill. Time is precious. The quicker we get the bill passed the quicker shall we rid our industries of that uncertainty which, aside from bad tariff legislation itself, is the greatest source of harm in tariff legislation.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Another Great Ship Canal.

The great canal between the North and Baltic seas is fast approaching completion, and the engineers say that it will be opened without fail next year. It has no locks or sluices along its course, but at each end there are gates regulating the water level in the canal. The average level will be the same as that in the Baltic. The bed of the canal is 27 feet below normal water level and it has a bottom width of 66 yards. The slope of the sides is either two to one or three to one, and the least depth of water is to be about 18 feet deep. The Baltic trading steamers generally draw less water than this minimum and are of such a beam that they can easily pass in the canal. The greatest amount of curvature is made with a radius of 3,000 feet, and 63 per cent. of the canal is straight. During the summer about 5,000 men have been at work on the great ditch, and up to the present time about 100,000,000 cubic yards of excavation have been completed at an expense of about $17,500,000. The entire cost of the canal is estimated at $39,000,000, of which sum Prussia contributes $12,500,000 and the German Empire the balance.

The Making of Fly Paper.

The substance used in the sticky paper employed to catch flies is a kind of bird lime. The regular bird lime is made from the bark of the holly by boiling it and condensing the product until it is about the consistency of molasses. It is the stickiest stuff known to the chemist. A fly that touches the paper never gets away to tell the tale; a bird that lights on the twig that has been smeared with it finds escape an impossibility. The use of it on paper to destroy insects is an Indian invention. In Hindostan flies and mosquitoes make life a burden, and without the sheets of sticky paper hung everywhere about the roof and on the walls, existence would be a misery.

An Income Like a Vanderbilt's.

Dean Hoffman, of the General Theological Seminary, New York, has an income as large as that of Cornelius Vanderbilt. He inherited most of his property, which is in the form of city real estate. The Hoffman House, containing the celebrated barroom, belongs principally to this worthy clergyman, and pays 25 per cent. on the investment. He has given more than a million to the church, and his brother, Dr. Charles F. Hoffman, built All Angels Church, endowed it and gave it to the parish.

EMPEROR WILHELM ought to cease worrying about the Triple Alliance and devote himself actively to straightening out affairs in the German Empire. The gambling and lottery scandals, in which so many high officers of the army are involved, show the rottenness which comes of of garrison life, with its terrible "ennui." The military party in Germany has by these exposures received a blow from which it will find it hard to recover. If Wilhelm tries whitewashing the culprits, it will be bad for him.

Total Number of Prizes for this County, 226.

CAUTION.—No Tags will be received before January 1st, 1894, nor after February 1st, 1894. Each package containing tags must be marked plainly with Name of Sender, Town, County, State, and Number of Tags in each package. All charges on packages must be prepaid.

READ.—SPEAR HEAD possesses more qualities of intrinsic value than any other plug tobacco produced. It is the sweetest, the toughest, the richest. SPEAR HEAD is absolutely, positively and distinctively different in flavor from any other plug tobacco. A trial will convince the most skeptical of this fact. It is the largest seller of any similar shape and style on earth, which proves that it has caught the popular taste and pleases the people. Try it, and participate in the contest for prizes. See that a TIN TAG is on every 10 cent piece of SPEAR HEAD you buy. Send in the tags, no matter how small the quantity.

Very sincerely,
THE P. J. SORG COMPANY, MIDDLETOWN, OHIO.

A list of the people obtaining these prizes in this county will be published in this paper immediately after February 1st, 1894.

A Tonic that Quiets the Nerves.

Not all the sedatives and nerve foods and narcotics, in which this age of medical discovery is so prolific, can restore quiet to the nerves permanently, so long as the tranquillity of those sensitive organs is disturbed by irregular digestion. When the food is not adequately digested and assimilated, a tonic or invigorating effect is not exerted upon them, they remain weak and unstrung, and nightly repose is disturbed and fitful. Beginning at the fountain head, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters reforms a disordered condition of the stomach and promotes general vigor, in which the nerves share in common with the rest of the system. A regular action of the bowels and liver, resulting from the use of the medicine, also conduces to this good effect. Malaria, rheumatism and kidney complaint—all nerve-disturbing complaints—are removed by the Bitters.

The Royal Family as Gardeners.

There is only one bed of flowers in the beautiful grass plot at Osborne, which is in the summer fragrant with the scent of pinks and carnations, and this is always watched by Princess Beatrice, who tends and cares for the flowers for the Queen's delight. The Queen loves gardening, and all her children were taught to dig and plant flowers, fruit, and vegetables in season. Each child had a separate garden, and each had the same kinds of vegetables and flowers. The gardens are still kept up exactly as the Princes and Princesses cultivated them years ago.

ASTHMATIC TROUBLES and Soreness of the Lungs or Throat are usually overcome by Dr. D. Jayne's Expectorant—a sure cure for Colds.

She Guards It Sacredly.

One secret that a woman can generally keep is her honest, way-down, unmodified opinion of the man who persuaded her to marry him twenty-five or thirty years ago.—Somerville Journal.

GOOD SPIRITS

follow good health while low spirits, melancholia, impaired memory, morose, or irritable temper, fear of impending calamity and a thousand and one derangements of body and mind, result from pernicious, solitary practices, often indulged in by the young, through ignorance of their ruinous consequences. Nervous debility, and loss of manly power, not infrequently result from such unnatural habits.

To reach, reclaim and restore such unfortunates to health and happiness, is the aim of an association of medical gentlemen, who have prepared a treatise, written in plain but chaste language and treating of the nature, symptoms and curability, by home treatment, of such diseases.

A copy of this useful book will, on receipt of this notice, with 10 cents in stamps, for postage, be mailed securely sealed in a plain envelope. Address, WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Read the Label. Send for Book.

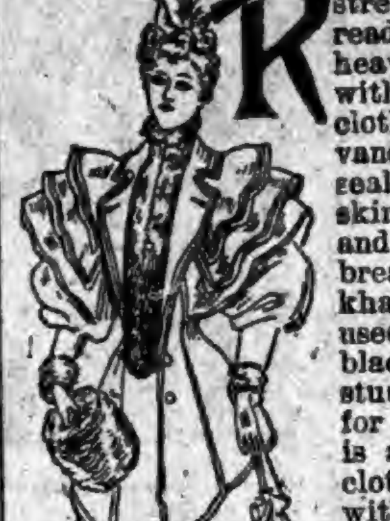
MANY NEW AND HANDSOME STYLES.

Coats and Jackets Are Superseding Capes—Richly Made Street Dresses Heavily Finished with Fur—Delicate Shades Are Much in Demand.

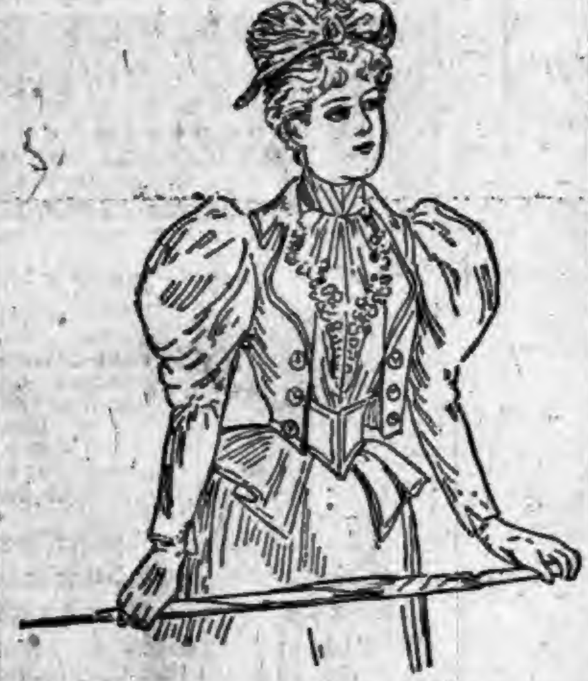
Gotham Fashion Gossip.

New York correspondence:



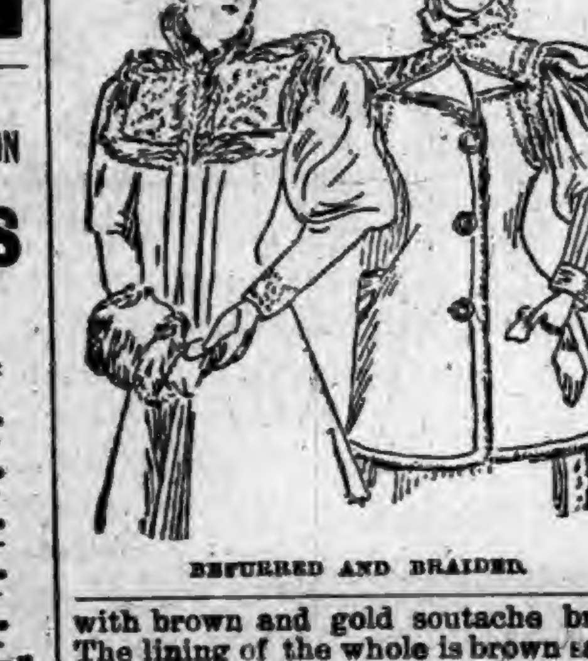
RICHLY made street dresses already appear heavily finished with fur. Brown cloth is deeply vandyked with seal about the skirt and waist and across the breast. Astrakhan is also much used chiefly the black. A very stunning notion for a street gown is a blue rough cloth overshot with fleecy black, and finished about the skirt with a two-inch edge of astrakhan and around the bodice with a two-inch frill of the fur. An astrakhan butterfly collar completes a charming rig. Coats and jackets are superseding the pretty capes, but on the warmer days the young woman who wishes to appear indifferent to cold may wear such a costume as that in the second picture in this column, wherein the jacket is short and open. It is warmly lined, however, the fronts ornamented with large and handsome buttons and its revers extend into a fairly broad turn-down collar. Beneath the jacket there is a blouse made of old rose and white striped silk, with a full and very pretty jabot of ecru lace at the neck. The pointed corselet belt is heavily whaleboned, hooks in front and has a small pleated skirt attached to it that is finished with machine stitching. The material is a warm and heavy beige-colored cloth.

While capes are getting the go-by as the cold weather strengthens, yet if you have a cape and will cover it all over with braid and line it handsomely with rich silk, you may wear it on the street, but you must look at the coated woman with an air so scornful that she won't dare look the same way at you. In other words, if you must wear a cape, the only comfort you can find will be to make other women discontented with their better fortune. Coats are made in heavy smooth cloths; they fit trimly over the bust and about the waist and out on to the hips, and from there they flare into big fluted skirts. If one skirt and all its flute does not satisfy the frantic tailor, he goes into a regular whirligig frenzy of double skirts, sometimes as many as four, each a little shorter than the last, and each flutier. What is even worse, on each skirt he puts a little ruffle, and the result makes one curious to know whether the wearer has any feet or if she is really a pen-wiper.



WARMER THAN IT LOOKS.

The first picture shows a pretty jacket, but one open to the penwiper parallel owing to its wee triple cape. It is in Louis XVI. style, though, so it is all right. It is cut from a faded blue cloth and opens over a vest of wool seal which the muff and cuffs match. The whole garment is machine-stitched at the edges, and the ample sleeves are called Rachel sleeves. Another stylish winter jacket is seen at the right in the third illustration. It is made of dark-brown camel's hair, and the back and sides are gored so that its skirts shall flare. Two serpentine ruffles, the upper of cloth the lower of velvet, trim the standing collar. The sleeves have half-moon shaped epaulettes, and the armholes are encircled by a band made of two cloth strips with one of velvet between. All edges and seams, as well as the pockets and sleeves, are trimmed with brown and gold soutache braid. The lining of the whole is brown satin, plain or quilted.

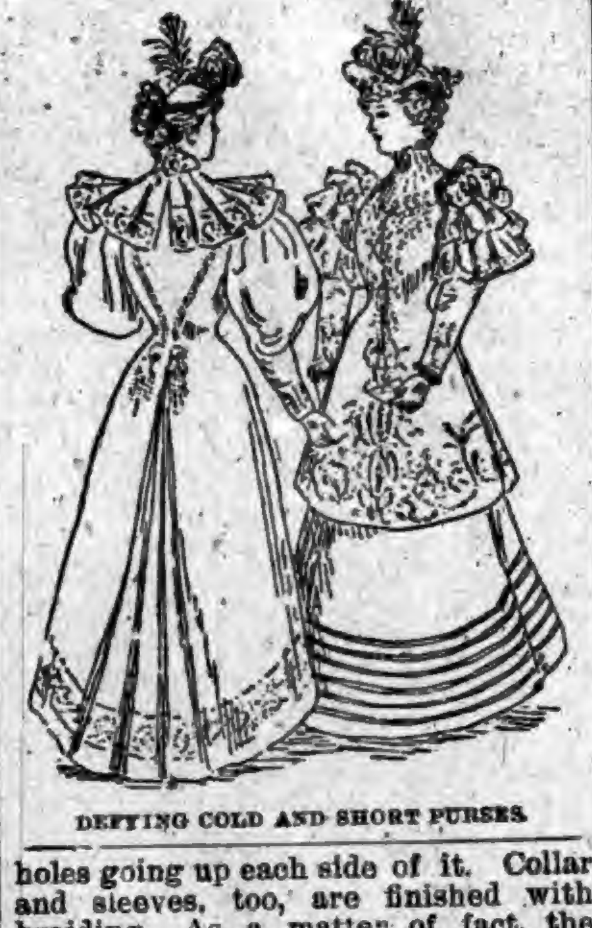


BEFURRED AND BRAIDED.

Beside the garment just described there is shown a coat in black plush shot with yellow. Its upper part is covered with a square collar, which is embroidered with jet and edged with blue fox, the latter coming around the standing collar. The fronts of the coat are wide, are sewed to a plain yoke, and then arranged in two pleats. The back has no yoke, but is gored, for the fashionable flare must not be omitted. It buttons invisibly in front, and is lined with yellow satin merveilleux. The muff is made of plush and edged with bands of blue fox. The picturesque hat worn is bordered with the same fur, and has for other adornment a bunch of ostrich plumes, a fancy buckle, and a jet aigrette.

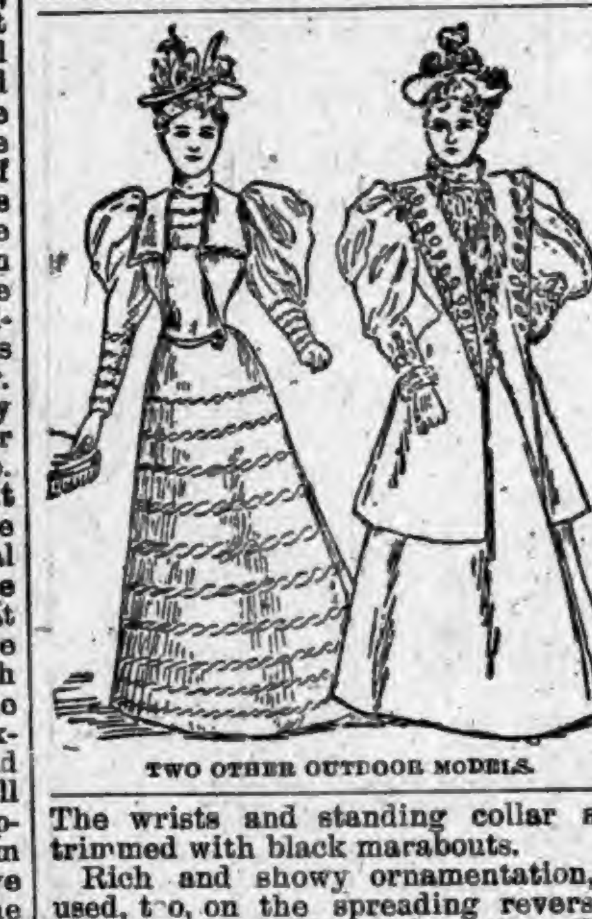
As for coat and jacket colors, all delicate shades are much in demand and they come in exquisite finish. All shades of brown are seen, from coffee color through the Havanas, chestnuts and chocolates. Almost all coats, except the frantic ones mentioned, are finished with rows of braiding. Sometimes a girdle is simulated, often the bodice part from the bust line down over the hips is braided closely. Other coats are braided all over. Coats have shoulder capes and it depends entirely upon the courage of the maker and the muscle of the woman who buys how many capes there shall be. Sleeves are leg-of-mutton, very big at the top, tapering slowly past a full elbow and tight at the wrist. The ombre effect so much sought after indoors is carried out in coats and capes by braiding a solid dark cloth with row on row of shades of braid. Red from deep to light, and into green from dark to light is a favorite combination, or perhaps it would be better to say complication. Whole costumes are gotten up in this way, the skirt having a border of the variegated braiding and the coat being braided all over.

Among the long coats curious ulster affairs come which once on look like a tailor-made dress with a close fitting bodice that has a cute little frill to it. The skirt is full and has a big panel in front, braiding, buttons and buttonholes going up each side of it. Collar and sleeves, too, are finished with braiding. As a matter of fact, the skirt unbuttons on one side, the cross-over bodice does the same thing, and out of the garment the wearer steps. In case of a short trip, where you want to wear a light afternoon or evening dress, such a coat is of use, but it gives any timid person a shock to see a woman taking off her dress and not caring a bit, and that is what it looks like when Miladi divests herself of this combination.



DEFYING COLD AND SHORT PURSES.

A handsome and rich full-length coat is seen in the next sketch. The fabric used for it is black velvet, and it buttons invisibly. Both edges of the front are garnished with a rich jet galoon, and a similar but wider trimming comes around the bottom and trims the circular collarette, which is open in back and is lined with rose-colored faille. The back of the bodice part is trimmed with narrow jet passementerie that ends in fancy ornaments. The balloon sleeves have cuffs of embroidery, and the high Medici collar is also embroidered with jet. The coat is lined with rose-pink faille, and the jet embroidery may be done on black faille, as none but the most experienced hands can do it on the velvet direct. There is presented in the same picture a jacket equally elaborate in cut and adornment. It is in beige-colored cloth, hooks in front and is lined with white faille. It is very heavily embroidered with a spreading design in jet and steel beads down the front, around the bottom and as far as the center of the bodice part behind. The embroidery is especially ornate around the neck and rather deep around the bottom. The sleeves are garnished with four serpentine ruffles, lined with silk and also embroidered.



TWO OTHER OUTDOOR MODELS.

The wrists and standing collar are trimmed with black marabouts.

Rich and showy ornamentation, is used, too, on the spreading revers of the jacket of the last illustration. The complex pattern there shown is done in myrtle braid freely sprinkled with gold. The garment itself is wide at shoulders and hem, is myrtle green in color, and is worn over a dress of the same shade having a very wide skirt. With it comes a collar and plastron of skunk fur. A gown of red brown cloth with a novel trimming of brown serpentine braid is shown in the picture. It is made with a plain bodice having a pretty bolero jacket with revers.

Just now, gowns very much like spring dresses are much seen. Indeed, it is a wise woman who gets a dressy light gown made up in a dainty fashion, not too pronounced and looks sweet and fresh on the street, for she can lay away the gown after a few weeks' wear to take it out next spring when it will again seem brand new. Such a dress is made with a wide skirt, the width of the goods being for the length of the skirt and the seams lapping deeply. The bodice is a queer little affair, a sort of Eton jacket with a triple collarette added which fastens at the shoulder. The jacket seems to open on a seamless vest of the cloth. The sleeves are very big at the top and taper slowly to the wrist, and the flaps of the collarette hang well over the shoulders.

Cloth gowns in overshot goods with points here and there of velvet to match the bright shade, are worn with butterfly coats. The latter garment is a sort of sublimated cape. It is, indeed, hardly more than a collarette with sleeves attached, and is queer enough to look at in the hand, though it is stylish as can be when on. These are made of velvet and pointed with fur. They consist of little capelets over an abbreviated bolero, said jacket not being open like a self-respecting bolero, but buttoned. The sleeves are the usual big ones. If you took a long coat that was especially well supplied with collar and frills, and cut it off just under the arms low enough to take in the armholes and sleeves, you would have a butterfly coat. And that way of getting it would cost less than to buy it outright, for it is down in fashion's price-list that three-fifths of a garment costs more than the whole of it, when it is newly fashionable to wear only the former fraction.

Coaches in France.

As regards the history of coaches in France. Henry IV. was assassinated in 1610. Soon after his death some engravings were published, representing him being murdered in his carriage by Ravaillac. It is from these that Roubo has had the sketches of the three carriages on his plate 172 engraved.

They are simply square boxes, measuring by scale six feet in length by three and a half feet in width, on four wheels of the same diameter, without any springs or straps, and seating six persons in all, namely, two with their backs to the horses, two facing them, and two more, one on each side of the two "boots," at the sides. Each vehicle had a roof resting on light columns, and curtains to draw or to let down.

This agrees well with the received accounts of the incident, according to one version of which Henry rode in an open carriage, and according to another that as soon as the fatal blow was delivered by the assassin, the King's attendants, who rode with him in the carriage, drew the curtains, and, hiding the King from public view, assured the enraged people that he was only wounded.—Notes and Queries.

General Instead of Archbishop.

Archduke Eugene of Austria, whose name was put forward a year ago as candidate for the Archbishopric of Olmutz, an office which he was most anxious to accept, has just been appointed to the command of the infantry brigade stationed there with the rank of General. His tastes are far more ecclesiastical than military, and he has passed all the regular examinations of the faculty of Theology and been graduated as a doctor of divinity. He is the tallest and most magnificently proportioned of any Prince of the blood of Europe. The Archbishopric of Olmutz is now held by a Cardinal, whose parents are Jewish peasants, and who still hold to the faith of their forefathers, notwithstanding that their son, who now bears the title of Prince and maintains a semi-regal state, has taken them to live with him in his palace.

The Word Vim.

According to my opinion, the use of this word as a synonym of energy, vigor, etc., has arisen in this way. Some pedantic journalist, considering, perhaps, the Anglo-Saxon noun "strength" too vulgar, and wishing to overawe his readers with a Latin expression, chose the word "vis," probably in connection with a verb governing the accusative case, but, reluctant to offend against the sacred rules of Latin grammar, he employed the accusative "vim."

This mode of expression may have been repeated several times, and as the people liked the sound of the word, even without knowing what it meant, they also employed it in instances in which no accusative was required, and thus the misused word became a current expression.—Notes and Queries.

Going Out with Firecrackers.

An interesting case of "the ruling passion strong in death" is described by the Toronto Mail. A humorist in Japan who jested all his life told his friends when he was dying that his body was not to be washed after death, but was to be taken at once to the family temple to be cremated. When he died his instructions were followed, and the chief priest took the body to the cremation ground. As soon as it was set on fire the mourners were astonished by several loud explosions. At first they were inclined to take to their heels, but curiosity got the better of fear, and careful inspection showed that the humorist had stowed away a large number of firecrackers about his person before his death.

Egyptian Papyri.

A collection of Egyptian papyri recently purchased by subscription for the Geneva Public Library is being examined by M. Jules Nicole. He has discovered fragments of the "Iliad" and the "Odyssey," the former comprising portions of Books XI. and XII., presenting great variations from the received text. There is also a passage of Euripides' "Orestes," a thousand years older than any manuscript hitherto known. M. Nicole has likewise found a didactic elegy on the stars, an idyll on Jupiter and Leda, and historical and scientific compositions.—London Times.

A Snub-Nosed Regiment.

In the Russian army there is one particular regiment of infantry of the guards formed by the Emperor Paul, the men of which are recruited, not so much with regard to their height or the color of their hair and complexions as to the shape of their noses. Emperor Paul had a typical Kalmuk nose of the most excruciatingly up-tilted pattern, and since then, out of compliment to him, all of the officers and men of this particular regiment have noses of the same shape, the sight which they present on parade being somewhat startling.

Chimneys.

The extent or degree of the oscillation of tall chimneys may be exactly taken by a close observation of the shadows they cast upon the ground. An instance to the point is that of a chimney 115 feet high and four feet in diameter externally at the top, near Marseilles, France, the oscillations of which were observed by the shadow during a high wind to attain a maximum of over twenty inches.

Preliminaries.

"We are going to be very busy from now on," said the weather-department employe who has some sporting proclivities.

"At what?"

"Fixing up the climatic conditions for the contest between the public and the coal combine."—Detroit Tribune.

The Queen's Name.

The following extract from Charles Greville's "Diary," under date Dec. 24, 1891, and, therefore, when Princess (now Queen) Victoria was exactly 7 months old, bears upon the point raised:

The Duke of Kent gave the name of Alexandrina to his daughter in compliment to the Emperor of Russia. She was to have had the name of Georgiana, but the Duke insisted upon Alexandrina being her first name. The Regent sent for Lieven (the Russian Ambassador) and made him a great many compliments, (en le persifiant,) on the Emperor's being godfather but informed him that the name of Georgina could be second to no other in this country, and therefore she could not bear it at all.

It was accordingly as "Alexandrina Victoria" that the infant Princess was baptized on June 24, 1819.—Notes and Queries.

Too Humane.

It is hard to understand how any one can be too humane, but it really seems if a story recently told by a French journal is true, that the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has something to answer for.

Two little girls has been visiting an exhibition of paintings with their governess. On their return their mother asked them:

"Well, what picture pleased you most?"

"The one that showed the Christians thrown to the lions in the Roman arena," both children answered.

"Indeed!" said the mother. "I suppose it worked on your feeling to look at it."

"Oh, yes, mamma," said the younger child; "there was one poor dear lion that didn't have any Christian to eat!"

Carlyle's Temper.

It is easier to say why a particular man should be a pessimist than why a great many should be. In Carlyle it is tolerably clear that early surroundings and facts of temperament had a good deal to do with the settled gloom of his speculations. Calvinism trains strong men, but can hardly be said to predispose to cheerfulness.

This particular man of genius had constitutional ailments, and his life was for a long time a struggle with poverty, and he grew up in a very dismal period—the time when the great war had left us overstrained and disenchanted, the later time when reform seemed to be unprofitable, and the days of famine that forced free trade upon the country.—Dr. C. H. Peterson in The Fortnightly Review.

Matters of Millions.

More than $1,200,000,000 of railway property in this country is estimated to be in the hands of receivers. It is an imposing total well calculated to give some notion of the vastness of the transportation interests. Five great systems under receivers—the Union Pacific, Northern Pacific, Philadelphia and Reading, Erie, and Richmond Terminal—represent close to 25,000 miles of road, with an aggregate capitalization of $416,724,711, assets of $1,174,312,871, and funded debts of $517,028,556. On a stock exchange valuation the stocks of these roads are worth about 12 per cent on the dollar, or say a total of about $50,000,000.—Railway Times.

OUR idea of a rash, fool-hardy man is one who will dare to read out loud in the presence of a school teacher.

Cloves.

The chief supply of cloves is obtained from the Islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, where the clove tree was introduced in 1830. Trees ten years old should produce twenty pounds of cloves. Trees of twenty years, frequently produce upward of 100 pounds each. The yield this season will be in excess of any previous year.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A Timely Bit of Advice.

In these times of grippe and pneumonia it is of great importance that we should know where to look for a safe and sure remedy. A slight cold may become a serious one, the scarcely noticeable pain in the chest is often the forerunner of pneumonia. The first cough may lead to consumption (a cough is always dangerous). Never neglect a cold or cough for even a day, but get at once, as a safe and sure remedy, Kemp's Balsam, the best cough cure, which is recommended on all sides. It should be kept in the house regularly to avoid delay when needed. It is sold in all the drug stores.

It restored him to perfect health to the great astonishment of his family and friends." John Quibell, Holt, Ont.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

Wonderful in Its Effects.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1875.

The traveler from Auburn, Indiana, writing his name and address in hotel registers, is no longer questioned as to its locality nor reluctant to acknowledge his place of residence.

That day had now gone by and with it had passed the struggle which every town must undergo while laying the real foundation upon which is to be reared its best superstructure.

From the beginning of the Centennial year onward, the history of DeKalb county must be closely identified with the most valuable growth and development of Northeastern Indiana.

Railroad facilities, water, fuel, hard woods, healthfulness and beauty of site, with many other advantages, all combined with the push and enterprise of citizens energetically engaged in various industries, had ushered in a prosperity excelled by only a few towns in this state. Real values were constant, accompanied by phenomenal growth.

During the earlier years, when an apparently doomed town, Auburn was deserted by some of her hitherto leading people and a marked peculiarity of a later period has been their return to abide. Lost confidence had been restored and the stability of existing advantages guaranteed opportunities for satisfactory investment of capital in trade, realty, manufacturing and banking.

While ever heartily welcome to further build up and extend town growth till her expansion of territory and population shall warrant her putting on the dignity and importance of a city, it is not to be forgotten in the annals of Auburn, that the highest praise should be [illegible] those who not only remained through her darkest days, but who assumed heavy burdens and great risks when the scales poised doubtfully and turned the balance to the prosperous side. The labor of the writer shall not have been in vain if this just object shall have been made prominent and brought due credit to the old town residents.

Ten years had gone by since the war had closed. Time had softened the antipathies which had divided citizens on election day into two hostile camps. Regarding only the common welfare, all interest in political supremacy in town matters had almost ceased. No party tickets were nominated for the May election and a Union ticket alone occupied the field until a late hour, when a slight opposition was mustered. The vote cast reached only 116 and large majorities elected the following persons for town trustees, viz: R. D. Tefft, W. McIntyre H. C. Peterson, W. W. Humes and T. C. Mays. Cyrus D. Hare was chosen clerk; J. Abright, treasurer; T. D. Gross, assessor, and Darius K. Houghton, marshal.

It has been an almost universal experience, of which Auburn is no exception, that revenues from taxation, however excessive, have failed to meet the requirements of a growing town. The popular clamor overrides prudent consideration and the panacea of many is an issue of bonds, relieying the present to embarass the future.

The municipal expenses of Auburn have ever been met by the issue of orders whose excess during successive years had reached in 1875, more than $2,000; but from that time to the present, no bonded debt has been created and, were it not for the electric lights, this indebtedness would soon be canceled.

But in an emergency in the line of school facilities, the people have never hesitated and have promptly sought relief through the issue of bonds, and the years 1875 and '6 were marked by an unusual movement in this direction.

Time and again, fires had broken out and destroyed valuable property, injuring the town and affecting owners, and a strong but powerless minority as desirous of at least organizing a hook and ladder company and would gladly have voted a 25 cent levy for purchase of a fire engine; but selfish apathy of the great majority prevented action. It was futile to urge that a good fire department would lessen the cost of insurance and in a single instance save its entire expense. In swift succession, the academy, the woolen mills, and other discovered attempts at wrecking buildings by fire rudely awakened the public to the grave fact that an incendiary was at work in the town, and still no action toward fire protection was taken.

In this essential regard, the lesson is taught how difficult it is to remedy existent evils of a municipality when individual confidence of immunity outweighs the sense of public welfare. Even at present, there are those who sneer at our gallant fire department, our fine engine and splendid wells and, advocating water works, forget that they often fail in power at critical moments, such as last summer saved the Church Furniture Co. works and surrounding property

With singular inconsistency, the needful is often opposed and the needless approved. The conduct of town affair should be placed in the hands of men who, successful in their own business, would, like Wanamaker the merchant, bring like advantageous methods into the public service.

Although backward in protecting themselves against fire, citizens showed no lack of energy in other directions. As population increased, the spirit of speculation provided building lots and the erection of residences and business houses progressed in all directions. Life, activity and encouragement greeted the visitor on every hand. Facilities for cheap living abounded and the market furnished all necessities as well as luxuries at moderate prices.

Enterprise was shown in the acquisition of contiguous real estate on all sides of the corporation. Wm. McIntyre had bought a fine five-acre tract to the southwest and during April. it was laid off into lots and placed on the market. About the same time, John C Sommers, now of Pueblo, Col., had bargained with Edward Baker for forty acres of his farm across the creek eastward, platted the same into lots and streets and invited buyers either for residence purposes or for a manufacturing site. The time seemed opportune in many respects for such speculation and its vicinage to the business part of town indicated a favored and hopeful location. To assist the project, the county was induced to construct a costly bridge along the line of Ninth Street east, and over $400 municipal road fund was expended in establishing a grade through the creek bottom. But no one cared to take the initiative, the lots grew up in weeds, cows used the bridge as a crossing to pasture, Mr. Baker at some expense recovered and returned his land to purposes of farming and so it remained till recently, when again laid out as Natural Gas Addition, it has become a thriving and promising suburb.

In November, Ensley's new addition by the Eel River Road was speedily building up and a number of frame houses were being completed.

Jacob Stamets, although unsuccessful from adverse and uncontrollable circumstances, did nobly his part to build up the lower part of the town and earnestly endeavored to secure manufacturing advantages by liberal and continuous offers. We have seen him freely tendering two acres of his land to the B. & O. railroad company, laying out an addition that bears his name, and building at much expense a fine frame, hotel.

During 1875, many of his lots had been taken and soon seven houses, the nucleus of the suburb, were ready for occupancy. Undismayed by waning possibilities, he gave public notice as late as the spring of 1877, as follows: "For the benefit of such men as will come here and establish manufactories, I offer as inducement ground free of cost on which to locate the buildings required. These grounds lie between the Eel River and the B. & O. railroads and are known as Stamets addition to the town of Auburn!"

Among those who built residences during the year were Frank Reynolds in Rainier & Headley's addition, James Barclay a large dwelling on Jackson street, and Alexander Hall on South Main. D. Z. Hoffman put up his present frame house right upon what was then the middle of the old Fort Wayne highway Guy Plum erected at much cost the brick residence now owned by A. Robbins, and other builders were Enos Kuhlman, Engelbert Ashley and Wm. Snyder.

It seems that some of the young people of St. Joe and vicinity are in the habit of disturbing the meetings that are now in progress, and among the number are some that would be if they would behave themselves, very nice young ladies, but they have become so rude and noisy that forbearance has ceased to be a virtue. The names of some of these young boys and girls (not gents and ladies) have been reported to your correspondent, and if our attention is again called to it we shall publish their names without any regard to their good names, Take warning

The St. Joe News has had a bad spell of the grip, so bad that it has not been able to get out so far this week and the prospect for a speedy recovery is not very brilliant. The main cause of the grip is that M. E Olds held a chattel mortgage on the concern and owing to the hard times for the past six months Mr. Williams was unable to meet his engagements, and rather than entail any further loss, concluded to let M. E. take the office and its fixtures for his pay. Mr. Williams informs us that his failure to proceed with the paper is owing to his being unable to make his collections on subscriptions of which there are several hundred dollars due and unpaid.

The protracted meeting at the Church of God is still going on yet. Do not know how long it will continue. There have been fifteen conversions and nine fellowships.

Careless with His Gun.

John Stonebreaker, of Corunna, was here Saturday and reported that his brother's son, who was accidentally shot as reported in the COURIER last week, seemed a little better. Drs. Rudolph and Mercer, who attend him seemed to have hopes for him. He shot himself while trying a ramrod he had made for his gun. He succeeded in pushing it into the rings on the stock, his foot at the same time resting on a stick of stove wood, beside which the gun, a short one, stood. He then tried to draw the ramrod out, but it came hard and he jerked it so that the gun was jerked off the floor. The hammer, striking the stove wood, flew back and discharged the gun, when the muzzle was close to his body. The charge of about forty bird shot went into the lower part of his body, and as far as known, some may be lodged among the intestines. If this is so, there is still no certainty of the extent of his injuries. But time will tell. It goes to illustrate the danger of allowing thoughtless lads to have a gun to handle. If he recovers, the injury will last a life time. And yet, we have no doubt, a neighbor boy on a near by farm will be handling a gun within a week from the time this serious accident took place.

SAILED THE SEAS 38 YEARS.

One of His Experiences.

For thirty-eight years Capt. Loud followed the sea, most of that time as master of a vessel, and upon retiring from the water was appointed by the Secretary of the United States Treasury to superintend the seal fisheries in Alaska, which position he held five years. He relates one experience as follows:

"For several years I had been troubled with general nervousness and pain in the region of my heart. My greatest affliction was sleeplessness; it was almost impossible at any time to obtain rest and sleep. Having seen Dr. Miles' remedies advertised I began using Nervine. After taking a small quantity the benefit received was so great that I was positively alarmed, thinking the remedy contained opiates which would finally be injurious to me; but on being assured by the druggist that it was perfectly harmless, I continued it together with the Heart Cure. Today I can conscientiously say that Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure did more for me than anything I had ever taken. I had been treated by eminent physicians in New York and San Francisco without benefit. I owe my present good health to the judicious use of these most valuable remedies, and heartily recommend them to all afflicted as I was."—Capt. A. P. Loud, Hampden, Me.

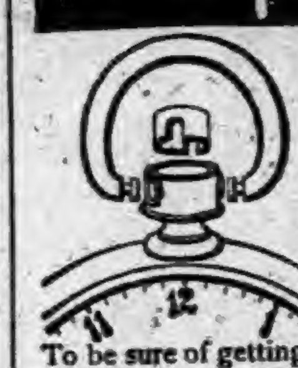
Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Cure are sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or by Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5, express prepaid. They are free from all opiates and dangerous drugs.

Going to Buy a Watch?

If so, buy one that cannot be stolen. The only thief-proof Watches are those with

Non-pull-out

BOWS.
Here's the Idea:
The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendent (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendent, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.



To be sure of getting a Non-pull-out, see that the case is stamped with this trade mark. It cannot be had with any other kind.

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy; a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

A Sad Death.

Can you describe anything worse than a young man dying by inches with consumption; cut off in the bloom of youth when bright prospects of happiness and prosperity are before him, a very sad death indeed. Is it not a fact that most cases of this kind are brought on by a cough, only slight at first, then more violent, followed by night sweats and a general breaking down of the entire system. These are cases in which people are to blame. Why not check this slight cough. Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup is guaranteed to cure. It will prevent consumption. Use it before it is too late. By druggists. Price .25, .50 and $1.

Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of Its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1875 CONTINUED.

The bright promise of safe and solid business investment was accepted in good faith by several resolute and far-sighted citizens, who, with limited means, embarked their all in pioneer factories, which, under careful management, have flourished exceedingly, steadily augmenting their facilities and proportionally increasing the output of their products.

Near the Saginaw freight depot, Messrs. Zimmerman & Watson began the operation of planing mills, worked up a large trade, the precurser of the flourishing establishment now existing, took in fresh and able partners, increased capital, added to buildings, and have ever conducted a successful and remunerative business.

Messrs. Shearer & Wilson, contractors and builders, this year completed the original part of what are the now so greatly enlarged and well-known Auburn Church Furniture Company Works. This building they used as a planing mill and here was laid the foundation for a most important business having a permanent basis and a guaranteed future. Later, Solomon Shearer disposed of his interest, W. H. Keeran and W. H. McQuiston entered into partnership with A. C. Wilson, a stock company was formed, extensive additions were made to the buildings, and orders from distant points gave steady work to a large number of hands. Amidst much difficulty the company forged their way forward, passed safely through the monetary panic of last summer, entered upon a period of deserved prosperity, and now stand one of Auburn's most solid and valued institutions. [The above was written prior to the fire of Dec. 12, 1893, which completely destroyed their extensive plant]

F. N. Wright & Co. had established a lumber yard in a central location on Jackson street in 1874, and so extensive was their traffic that sales two years later amounted per annum to two million feet of lumber, one each of lath and shingles and 1,500 bushels of lime. The yard was finally located upon grounds near the freight depot of the Saginaw railroad, a large warehouse with extensive sheds was put up and Abner Lewis conducted the concern in which he is well known and prosperously engaged.

Nicholas Ensley in August purchased two low lying lots on the southeast corner of Cedar and Seventh streets, constructed solid foundations, upon which he erected a double, two story block to be used as an agricultural implement storehouse. The completed work was a great improvement in that locality and gave the town a substantial and well-furnished building. Large plate glass windows occupied the front and added tone and character to the place. It was in the north room of this block that for years the millinery store of Ensley & Harter was located, a store that obtained an extended reputation for fine goods at fair prices and brought hither many purchasers from other towns. In the upper story of the building, the veterans of the civil war long held their meetings, their hardtack socials, and their rooms were rendered very attractive by the liberality of their owner and the enthusiasm of the Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army post.

W. P Harter, a genial, big hearted and public spirited man, having dissolved a partnership with Mr. Ensley, whose appointment as pension agent necessitated his removal to Indianapolis, for a time carried on business at the old stand till the completion of the Shaffer Block, when he removed thither and was in full tide of prosperity when attacked by an illness that proved fatal and deprived Auburn of one of her best citizens.

During the season of 1875, two ancient landmarks were removed to make way for new and substantial improvements. One of these, the old Hebel saloon building, was shifted elsewhere and on the vacated ground, the foundation was laid for the brick business house since occupied by those enterprising and justly popular young grocerymen, John and Michael Hebel. The other, the time-worn Puffenberger dwelling, was taken away to make room for a brick block later erected by Wm. McIntyre, who on Feb. 1st, had bought from Mrs. Jane Puffenberger and her son Samuel, a hundred feet off the west side of their lot. Later, Charles McClellan erected a residence eastward and connected with what is known as the First National Bank, and the old-timer returning from abroad would look in vain in this vicinity for the Auburn of an early day.

Philip Fluke had occupied his new brick dwelling in the west confines of the town on Seventh street, and the shabby little frame house standing vacant in the uncultivated lot, and farther north on Main street, other dilapidated buildings on fine lots, the property of Edward Baker, seemingly a reproach to their owners and blemishes upon the bright newness of the town, were unsightly relics of the olden time. These defects have since been happily effaced and handsome and valuable blocks, like the Farmers Bank building, the Shaffer Block, and fine residence properties, have superseded them, keeping pace with the demands and progress of the municipality.

It will be remembered that a crisis had arrived respecting the extension of the Eel River railroad to Butler from the Junction, and a quantity of subscriptions had to be obtained or the work would not be done. At this juncture, four Auburn citizens, in a spirit far above selfishness and anxious only for the welfare of the town, volunteered to become personally responsible for such an amount of stock subscriptions as were required to make up the deficit which was about $4,000.

The road was duly built, but the men who had stepped forward to shoulder the responsibility for probable shortage were left to bear the brunt of payment for their liberality. Those citizens who especially merit a record of public spirit and self denial were John H. Ford, John L. Davis, Frank D. Ryan and Samuel Sprott. In the spring of 1877, a committee consisting of John P. Widney, A. L. Hollopeter and W. McIntyre was appointed to audit accounts between these guarantors and the railroad company. Their report showed $18,000 collected and paid, and $3,500 still owing, which was made good from their personal resources.

In the year 1875, public interest from the outside, that had hitherto been centered upon Auburn, became largely diverted towards the proposed railroad town on the B. & O line, to be known as Garrett City. During the latter part of November, 1874, a freight train drawn by engine No. 519, left Defiance, O., bound for South Chicago. The engineer was Edward Drone, the fireman, Charles Shaw; conductor, J. Dodge, and the brakemen, Benjamin Given and I. J. Stewart, and not a man of them had ever been west of Hicksville. They had no pilot, but had heard that the division headquarters were to be at Garrett. It was night when they approached the place, through which they passed at the rate of twenty miles an hour. On their return, by daylight, they saw a large barn-like structure and a Y track. On the right was a spur track on which stood a construction train. They slackened speed, learned that this was Garrett and in disgust, put on steam and sped away at a lively rate. Another trip, and there were two long sidetracks, a track from the shed, a coal track, a temporary frame boarding house managed by a Mrs. Clay, several log cabins on various knolls and a population of about two hundred men.

Why Immigrants Avoid the South.

New Orleans Daily Picayune.

One of the most remarkable facts of human nature is that, when once people adopt a false notion concerning something of which they are wholly ignorant, they will cling to it with the utmost tenacity until some serious experience can correct them and set them right.

This is seen in the persistence with which people cling to ancient and wholly erroneous prejudices against the Southern country. The eagerness and avidity with which people flocked to the Oklahoma and Cherokee strip opening to settlement were striking evidences of the desire people of the old states of the Union have to emigrate to new countries. Oklahoma and the Cherokee strip have very little good land in their borders, while the hardships of camping for weeks and months around their confines so that the new settlers might get an opportunity to rush in and fight for an opportunity to secure a small grant of dry and barren land, wholly unimproved, were extreme, but were undertaken by thousands of families, embracing aged men, women and children. Nearly every person who succeeded in getting some land was thoroughly disappointed and dissatisfied, but, being where they were, the settlers were generally in no condition to surrender and return home, although many did that.

The question has been repeatedly asked why those people did not come to the Southern states, where they could find cheap and fertile lands, a healthful and delightful climate, and all the conditions for successful agriculture and prosperous industry. The answer to this question is simple. It is that people of the Northern states have acquired, through long years of sectional agitation and prejudice, some highly false but extremely injurous notions about the South. One of these is that our climate is excessively hot and unhealthful. Never was there a notion more false.

The Gulf States are noted for their salubrity and for their freedom from dangerous and fatal fevers, except when they are introduced from abroad. The bugbear of yellow fever is removed by the maintenance of a strict and vigilant quarantine. There has been no yellow fever in Louisiana for many years Texas, Alabama and Mississippi have been long exempt. Lack of precaution has several times admitted the disease into Florida, and this year into Georgia. All these visitations were the result of carelessness and lack of provision, which has been most effectual elsewhere.

The Gulf States are nearly exempt from typhoid and bilious fevers, and they are favorite and beneficial resorts for consumptives. As to the extremes of heat, they are unknown here. Sunstroke is of most rare occurrence in New Orleans, and the thermometer seldom registers above 90 degrees of warmth. Nothing is more common when St. Louis, Chicago and other Northern cities are experiencing excessive summer heats, to find here uniform and moderate temperatures from which nobody suffers. The only complaint that can be alleged against the summer climate of the Gulf Belt is that the season is very long, lasting for about five months; but there are no fierce heats. The wealthy inhabitants of the South are accustomed to seek Northern resorts in the summer; but the vast masses of the people stay here all the year round, and for years and years together, and their good health, longevity and ability to perform every sort of labor are undoubted.

Another bugaboo which has been purposely magnified by the enemies of the South is the lawlessness and insecurity to life alleged to prevail in this region. There are too many people who were born and reared in Northern states who live in the South, and who are engaged in every branch of industry, and who hold and express their own opinions on any subject, and who enjoy the completest liberty and security of life and rights, to let that lie go out broadcast much longer. Sometimes atrocious crimes drive the good people of communities to extremes of the rage and fury of wreaking popular violence, but so they do in all the states, from the Gulf to the British line. Human nature in America is much the same in every part. The South is just as safe for northern people as it is for southern people, and just as safe for either as any part of this great Union. Let the testimony of citizens and residents who have come here from the North be exclusively taken on this subject, and the South will abide by the verdict.

Another prejudice as unfounded as the others is that the South is no country for small farms, but is only adapted to the cultivation of great plantations. Nothing is more absurd. The great Southern staple of cotton, sugar and rice are always cash crops. Everybody makes one or the other, because they sell for cash. But a farmer need not devote himself to any of them. He can make only a single bale of cotton if he shall choose, and he can grow as much or as little sugar cane or rice as may suit his condition. The great sugar factories will always buy his cane, while rice and cotton are marketable in any quantity, from a bale of one and a sack of the other, to millions of bales and sacks. No country is so well adapted to the raising of assorted crops, and for truck farming and fruit-growing the Gulf Belt is a favorite region.

But the Southern country is suffering from the slanders and misrepresentations which for half a century have been actively promulgated and propagated to its prejudice. Prejudices can only be overcome by slow degrees and in long lapses of time; but they will wear out finally. Perhaps this is as well as not, for it prevents the Southern country from being made the scene of excessive speculative inflations. Every bubble is sure to burst, and the bigger its dimensions the more widespread will be its effect. Great visitations of overspeculations work damage that can never be paid for in any possible benefits that may accrue. Slower growth and legitimate development bring the most lasting good. The South need not be in too big a hurry.

Electric Humor.

One of the Columbian guards on the Wooded Island, whose business it was to drive intruders off the flower-beds and keep them from eating dinner on the grass, tells of a woman who accosted him about noon with this interrogatory: "Can you tell me where to get an electric lunch?" The guard at once surmised that she meant an electric launch, and began to explain to her that these launches ran on the lagoons and were propelled by electricity; but she declared she had read all about them, and knew a gondola when she saw one. What she wanted to find was the place where they cooked things by electricity and gave them away, and she believed it was in the electrical building. The guard finally directed her to the gallery of the Electricity Building.

There was exhibited in the Electricity Building, an electrocution chair for executing criminals by electricity, similar to those used in New York. In some way or other the impression got out among the country people that this was General George Washington's chair; and a man who had an exhibit in this building states that scarcely a day passed that several countrymen did not sit down in it so that they could go home and say they had sat in Washington's chair.—From "Undercurrents of Humor from the Fair," in Demorest's Family Magazine for January.

A HOLD-UP IN TEXAS.

EXPRESS MESSENGER KILLED BY THE ROBBERS.

An Accommodation Train on the B. & O. Wrecked—Many Injured—Powder Mill Explosion—The Italian Mission Goes to Wayne MacVeigh.

EXPRESS MESSENGER KILLED.

Texas the Scene of a Daring Train Robbery.

When the Southern Pacific east-bound train reached Dayton, Texas, John C. Richardson, the Wells-Fargo messenger, was found dead in his car, his head split open by a blow from an axe, and the car robbed. The whole affair was quite mysterious. At Dayton the station express agent appeared at the door of the car, but could not get an answer, and a colored brakeman, finding the door slightly ajar, pushed it back and was horrified to find the body of Messenger Richardson lying along side of the safe. While the body was still warm life was extinct. Three bullet holes in the back showed the cowardly nature of the attack. Another bullet had plowed a furrow in the back of the head.

It is thought one man did the work. Richardson's pistol was found in his locker, and he was evidently shot down as he stood with no thought of danger, by the small safe. One bullet from a 45-caliber revolver was found in the car. The car was a combined baggage and express with blind end, four side doors, and no partition. It was well filled with baggage and express matter and a person gaining an entrance unobserved could readily secrete himself.

Death on the B. & O.

A small engine used at the Edgar Thompson Steel Works to haul ladles of metal, crashed into the West Newton accommodation on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, on a bridge near Bessemer, Pa., hauling one coach of the accommodation into the creek forty feet below. Ten persons were injured, one of whom has since died, another is believed to have been fatally hurt.

At the point where the accident occurred, one of the Carnegie narrow gauge tracks and three Baltimore and Ohio tracks form an angle. When the West Newton accommodation was passing a dinkey engine hauling a train of empty ladle cars came up at full speed and plunged into the passenger train into the middle coach, drove it off the line, turned it bottom upward and hurled it to the creek bank below, where it landed on its top, trucks uppermost. The rear coach was thrown upon its side, and ten or twelve passengers in it made their escape from the windows. The car took fire, but fortunately all were rescued. The blame is not yet fixed.

Hopkins Elected.

The election for Mayor of Chicago to fill the unexpired term of Carter Harrison, who was murdered by Prendergast, was most vigorously contested. The campaign has been waged with all the vigor possible. The opposing candidates were George B. Swift, (Rep.) who was elected by the Council Mayor pro tem. on the death of Harrison, and John P. Hopkins, (Dem.) The vote cast was very large, and Hopkins was successful by the surprisingly small majority of 1,387.

Wreck on the Big Four.

Through freight No. 42, east-bound, on the Big Four, crashed into a yard engine backing a train into Cincinnati at Sedamsville. The wreckage was piled onto the Ohio and Mississippi track. The west-bound passenger train on that road was due and a 16-year-old boy, William Mantell, recognizing the danger, snatched a lantern from a brakeman and running up the track, flagged the Ohio and Mississippi express in time to prevent a wreck.

Another Dynamite Outrage.

Vienna special: A dynamite bomb was exploded in Kakonitz, Bohemia, thirty miles west of Prague. The residence of a lawyer named Wolff, in front of which the bomb burst, was wrecked and other houses were badly damaged. Wolff, his wife and two daughters were injured. There is no clue to the perpetrator of the outrage. It was discovered that thirty-two kilograms of dynamite had been stolen from the Government store in Kakonitz.

Powder Mill Explosion.

The grinding mill in the lower powder yard of E. I. Dupont, De Nemours & Co., near to Wilmington, Del., exploded, and Edward Gallagher, a workman, was instantly killed. The shock of the explosion was felt with great force in Wilmington. Houses were shaken to their foundations, and people were panic stricken.

Settled for $80,000.

J. Harvey Smith and family, who were terribly injured recently in a railroad wreck at Battle Creek, Mich., have received from the railroad company $80,000, in settlement of their claims. Frank Smith, the son, died of his injuries. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are still at Battle Creek.

The Italian Mission.

The President has appointed Wayne MacVeigh of Pennsylvania, to be ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States to Italy.

Elected to Congress.

Robert Adams, jr., ex-minister to Brazil, was elected to Congress in the Second Pennsylvania District, to succeed the late Charles O'Neill. The district is so overwhelmingly Republican that the Democrats decided to make no nomination.

Elected Senators.

In the Virginia Legislature Gen. Eppa Hunton was elected United States Senator for the short term and Thomas S. Martin for the long term.

A $10,000 Robbery.

Indianapolis special: It developed recently that David Stout, an old farmer, is loser about $10,000 in gold because he believed that the cellar of his little cottage was safer than a bank. He has been keeping the matter secret since the robbery was discovered on October 22, trying to catch the thief himself. Stout lives on a little farm two miles northwest of the city. The lost gold was his hard savings for twenty years. Mr. Stout stuck to bachelorhood until about five years ago, when he married a woman many years his junior. Early in October the family, consisting of husband, wife, and two children, went to the southern part of the State on a visit to his wife's relatives. He intrusted the keys of his house to his neighbor, Farmer Dishing, who was to see to the feeding of the stock, and do other necessary work upon the Stout farm until the owners returned. One night Dishing allowed two young men by the name of Allbright to occupy a bed in the Stout mansion. October 22, Mr. Stout had occasion to put a small amount of gold in his bank. He could not believe his eyes when he had dug at the spot marked by a stake, and found his long-hoarded treasure gone.

RIOT AT LATTY.

Toughs Attempt to Take the Little Town.

Latta (Ohio) special: A lot of toughs attempted to capture the town the other evening, but they found their match in the plucky Town Marshal, G. W. Davis. Three men named Saylor, and one named Lee, tough characters who lately came to this vicinity from the South and located near here, came in town and proceeded to fill up on bad whisky. They carried revolvers and announced that they could whip anybody in the place. Going to the Nickel Plate Railroad, they found the westbound local standing at the depot. The engineer was covered by revolvers and told to throw up his hands. He did so, and expected to be perforated with bullets, but was ordered to jump on his engine and leave town. The orders were speedily complied with. They then proceeded to "do" the town when Marshal Davis appeared on the scene with a posse and attempted their arrest. For a few moments shooting was promiscuously indulged in, but the officers succeeded in bagging the game, compelling surrender. One of the Saylors escaped, and it is supposed he was severely wounded. Another of the Saylors and Lee were slightly wounded. Dr. Herman, one of the Marshal's posse, was shot in the hand and head, but it is thought his injuries are not dangerous.

Important Pension Rulings.

Assistant Secretary of the Interior Reynolds has made four important pension rulings. He decided that the act of Congress prohibiting payment of pension after July, 1893, to a non-resident of the United States, except for actual service disabilities, applies to widows who are non-resident aliens; that where a soldier dies leaving a legally divorced wife and minor children over sixteen years old, his mother occupies a pensionable status and can apply for and receive a pension as dependent mother of such soldier upon making necessary proof, and that where an invalid pensioner dies leaving no increase or rerating claim pending at the bureau, but has accepted the rate of pension then received without demurring, the widow cannot file an original claim for rerating of her dead husband's pension.

Cattle Dying for Want of Food.

Galveston, (Texas) special: Captain Joseph F. Nash, an extensive ranchman, reports that in many localities in Western Texas no rain has fallen for five months, and consequently there is no grass, the range in many sections having been completely eaten up. Range cattle have been reduced to skeletons, and even now are dying by hundreds.

With the advent of cold weather, which generally strikes Texas the latter part of December or the early days of January, the loss of cattle is expected to be frightful. Sheep men are as badly off as cattlemen, as their range is also exhausted, and the low price for which wool is selling (seven and a half cents a pound) in the San Antonio market, will not cover the cost of production.

Want More Pay.

The New York Herald has the following dispatch from Pernambuco, Brazil: The cruiser Nichteroy, purchased by the Brazilian Government in New York, arrived here recently, and was delivered to the Brazilian Government as a fighting ship. There is already trouble with the crew. Those who enlisted in New York demand very high pay for re-enlistment for service in the Brazilian Navy, although it was well understood before sailing that they were expected to re-enlist for active service when a Brazilian port was reached. Representatives of President Peixoto refuse to allow the demands of the crew and will probably ship a new crew of Brazilians here. The Nichteroy will go to Bahia from here and thence to Rio Janeiro.

A New Silver Bill.

There was but one matter of national importance in Friday's session of the Senate. That was the introduction by Mr. Voorhees (Chairman of the Finance committee) of a bill providing for the coinage of the seignorage, or profit, from the silver coined and purchased under the Bland and Sherman acts, at the rate of two millions a month; the purchase (after that coinage is completed) of $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion a month; the withdrawal of all notes of less denomination than $10; the withdrawal of the $2.50 and $5 gold coin, and the appointment of five commissioners to attend an international conference for the establishment of a ratio between gold and silver. The bill was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Indiana Shaken Up.

Evansville, Ind., and vicinity was considerably shaken up the other day by two earthquakes. The shocks were very distinct from West to East. Persons in the upper stories of buildings were more sensible to the tremors than those on the lower floors, and a great many were badly frightened. The tremors were accompanied by a rumbling, grating sound much like that produced by a heavy wagon passing over the streets. At the court house the audience and attorneys rushed out in the corridor.

Telephone information from neighboring points is to the effect that both shocks were plainly felt.

Ex-Secretary Foster.

Fostoria, Ohio, special: Ex-Secretary Foster is making every effort to satisfactorily settle all claims against him, provided it can be done by a payment of 50 cents on the dollar at this time, with the possibility of additional payments in the future.

He says that if he can satisfactorily dispose of $150,000 of indorsements by Foster & Co., the greatest obstacle to a settlement of the other liabilities of the firm will have been removed and the rest will be comparatively plain sailing. Mr. Foster is in New York, having gone there with the express intention of securing financial aid.

A Jealous Husband.

A sensational tragedy occurred in the central portion of Fort Wayne, Ind. John Jacobs, an unemployed baker, while standing in the front door of his residence, pulled his wife into the hall and fired four shots from a revolver at her head. One of the bullets grazed the scalp and another was imbedded in the jaw-bone. Jacobs, half intoxicated and raving in a jealous rage, left his wife prostrate in the hall-way and rushed to the out-house where he held his gun to his left breast and pulled the trigger. The bullet entered just below the heart. It is thought Jacobs will die. His wife will recover.

Killed and Robbed.

Piedmont (W. Va.) special: As P. E. Haldeman, Superintendent of the Franklin Mine, three miles from here, stepped from a Cumberland and Pittsburgh train at the mines with $3,000 in a valise with which to pay the miners, he was struck on the head, knocked senseless and his valise taken. He never regained consciousness and died soon after. A tall, dark, smooth-faced stranger was seen about the mines and is suspected. One thousand dollars reward for the capture of the murderer is offered.

Big Billiards.

"Wizard" Schaefer won the deciding game of the "Big Three" billiard tourney at Madison Square Garden, New York, making a most sensational run and defeating Frank Ives by the absurd score of 600 to 50. The winner's average was 100, the highest of the tourney, and it also broke the world's record, made by M. Vignaux, the great French player, in a tri-cornered match between Slosson, Schaefer and himself in New York City in 1892.

Outlaw Evans Sentenced.

The jury in the case of the outlaw, Chris Evans, charged with the murder of United States Deputy Marshal Wilson and McGinnis at Sampson's Flat, disagreed. The judge, however, refused to discharge the jurors and sent them back. They returned in half an hour with a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, and fixing the penalty at life imprisonment.

Coal Miners to Be Locked Out.

Pittsburgh special: The 6,000 coal miners employed in the Monongahela River mines will be locked out if they enforce the uniform mining rate of 2½ cents. A committee called on the operators and they positively refused to confer with them. As a result all mines along the Monongahela and Youghiogheny rivers will likely cease operation.

To Aid Mexican Revolutionists.

A telegram from Bayard, Ariz., says it was reported that twenty-five men were arming near Wilcox, Ariz., preparatory to going into Mexico to assist the revolutionists. The department officers have telegraphed Forts Grant and Bowie, the military posts near the scene of the reported trouble, to investigate and enforce the neutrality laws.

Crushed to a Jelly.

Peter Jesie, an Italian, who was employed in the new Anchor mine, near Brazil, Ind., met death in a horrible form. He was passing through the entries of the mine on his way to the cage to go home when the roof gave away, burying him beneath an immense body of slate. His body was mashed to a jelly.

Shot a Burglar.

At Salineville, Ohio, a young man named James Gray entered the residence of Wash Morrison for the purpose of robbery, and was shot and dangerously wounded by Morrison, who was awakened by the noise made by the young man in entering the house.

Two Years for Prize-Fighting.

Crown Point (Ind.) special: The jury in the case of Martin Costello, the Roby prize-fighter, returned a verdict fixing his punishment at two years in the penitentiary and a fine of $5. All other cases continued until next term by agreement.

Only a Little Gone

Mary Liggins and Julia Freeman, the colored woman who held up and robbed Charles Wass, the Big Four employe, at Springfield, Ohio, of $62.50 in true Wild West style, have been arrested and $61.25 of the money recovered.

Fuller's Misdeeds.

J. W. Fuller, the alleged bank swindler under $2,000 bond for attempting to cash a fraudulent $5,000 draft at Richmond, Ind., will plead guilty. There are fifteen cases against him in nearly as many different States.

Indiana Man Selected.

William N. Hailman, at present Superintendent of the Public Schools at Laporte, Ind., has been appointed to the position of Superintendent of Indian Schools.

Scarlet Fever.

Scarlet fever is raging at Etna Green, Ind. Two deaths are reported and a large number of children are affected. The schools have been closed.

Mills Started Up.

The Roxford Knitting Company of Philadelphia, manufacturers of underware have started their mills on full time, employing 1250 hands.

Off for Honolulu.

Hawaiian Minister Thurston has taken passage at San Francisco on the steamer Alameda and sailed for Honolulu.

Man and Wife Murdered.

Mr. and Mrs. James Williams, living on a farm near Port Credit, Ont., were murdered by a farm hand.

MESSAGE ON HAWAII.

LONG-EXPECTED ANSWER BY THE PRESIDENT.

Events at Honolulu Set Forth in Official Detail—Mr. Cleveland Says His Task Has Been a Difficult One—Blount Is Indorsed.

Given Over to Congress.

The President's response to the resolution passed by both houses of Congress requesting information in Hawaiian affairs and especially as to the nature of the instructions given to Minister Willis, has been sent to Congress. The message is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: In my recent annual message to Congress I briefly referred to our relations with Hawaii and expressed the intention of transmitting further information on the subject when additional advices permitted. Though I am not now able to report a definite change in the actual situation, I am convinced that the difficulties lately created both here and in Hawaii and now standing in the way of a solution through executive action of the problem presented render it proper and expedient that the matter should be referred to the broader authority and discretion of Congress with a full explanation of the endeavor thus far made to deal with the emergency and ask them to review the considerations which have governed my action. I suppose that right and justice should determine the path to be followed in treating this subject. If national honesty is to be disregarded and a desire for territorial extension or dissatisfaction with a form of government not our own is to regulate our conduct I have entirely misapprehended the mission and character of our government and the behavior which the conscience of our people demands of their public servants.

When the present administration entered upon its duties the Senate had under consideration a treaty providing for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the territory of the United States. Surely under our constitution and laws the enlargement of our limits is a manifestation of the highest attribute of sovereignty and if entered upon as an executive act all things relating to the transactions should be clear and free from suspicion. Additional importance is attached to this peculiar treaty of annexation because it contemplated a departure from unbroken American tradition in providing for the addition to our territory of islands of the sea more than 2,000 miles removed from our nearest coast.

Reasons Against Harrison Treaty.

These considerations might not, of themselves, call for interference with the completion of a treaty entered upon by a previous administration. But it appeared from the documents accompanying the treaty, when submitted to the Senate, that the ownership of Hawaii was tendered to us by a provisional government set up to succeed the constitutional ruler of the islands, who had been dethroned, and it did not appear that such provisional government had the sanction of either popular revolution or suffrage. Two other remarkable features of the transaction naturally attracted attention. One was the extraordinary haste—not to say precipitancy—characterizing all the transactions connected with the treaty. It appeared that a so-called committee of safety, ostensibly the source of the revolt against the Constitutional Government of Hawaii, was organized on Saturday, Jan. 14; that on Monday, Jan. 16, the United States forces were landed at Honolulu from a naval vessel lying in its harbor; that on the 17th the scheme of a Provisional Government was perfected and a proclamation naming its officers was on the same day prepared and read at the Government buildings; that immediately thereupon the United States Minister recognized the Provisional Government thus created; that two days afterward, on the 19th day of January, commissioners representing such government sailed for this country in a steamer especially chartered for the occasion, arriving in San Francisco on the 28th day of January and in Washington on the 3d day of February; that next day they had their first interview with the Secretary of State and another on the 11th, when the treaty annexing the islands was practically agreed upon, and that on the 14th it was formally concluded, and on the 15th transmitted to the Senate.

Thus between the initiation of the scheme for a provisional government in Hawaii on the 14th of January and the submission to the Senate of the treaty of annexation concluded with such government, the entire interval was thirty-two days, fifteen of which were spent by the Hawaiian commissioners in their journey to Washington.

In the next place, upon the face of the papers submitted with the treaty it clearly appeared that there was open and undetermined an issue of fact of the most vital importance. The message of the President accompanying the treaty declared that "the overthrow of the monarchy was not in any way promoted by this Government," and in a letter to the President from the Secretary of State, also submitted to the Senate with the treaty, the following passage occurs: "At the time the provisional government took possession of the government buildings no troops or officers of the United States were present or took any part whatever in the proceedings. No public recognition was accorded to the provisional government by the United States Minister until after the Queen's abdication and when they were in effective possession of the government buildings, the archives, the treasury, the barracks, the police station, and all the potential machinery of the government."

But a protest also accompanied said treaty, signed by the Queen and her ministers at the time she made way for the provisional government, which explicitly stated that she yielded to the superior force of the United States, whose Minister had caused United States troops to be landed at Honolulu and declared that he would support such provisional government.

Sending Blount to Honolulu.

The truth or falsity of this protest was surely of the first importance, but no investigation to ascertain the facts had been made. I conceived it to be my duty, therefore, to withdraw the treaty from the Senate for examination and to cause an investigation to be made. I selected for this investigation James H. Blount of Georgia. His report, based upon an exhaustive investigation, with its accompanying proofs, is now before Congress or is herewith submitted. This report justifies, in my opinion, the statement that when the President was led to submit the treaty to the Senate with the declaration that "the overthrow of the monarchy was not in any way promoted by this government," and when the Senate was induced to receive and discuss it on that basis, both President and Senate were misled.

It is sufficient for the purposes of this communication to say that in January, 1893, a considerable portion of American and other foreign merchants residing at Honolulu favored the annexation of Hawaii to the United States and that the project was zealously promoted by our Minister to that country. He evidently had an ardent desire that it should become a fact accomplished by his agency and during his ministry and was not inconveniently scrupulous as to the means employed to that end. On the 19th day of November, 1892, nearly two months before the first overt attack tending toward the subversion of the Hawaiian government and the attempted transfer of Hawaiian territory to the United States, he addressed a long letter to the Secretary of State, in which the case for annexation was elaborately argued on moral, political and economical grounds. He refers to the loss to the Hawaiian sugar interests from the operation of the McKinley bill, and the tendency to still further depreciation of sugar property unless some positive measure of relief be granted. He strongly inveighs against the existing Hawaiian government and emphatically declares for annexation. He says: "In truth, the monarchy here is an absurdity, an anachronism." He further says: "Destiny and the vast future interests of the United States in the Pacific clearly indicate who at no distant day must be responsible for the government of these islands. Under a territorial government they could be as easily governed as any of the existing territories of the United States. Hawaii has reached the parting of the ways. She must now take the road which leads to Asia, or the other, which outlets her in America, gives her an American civilization and binds her to the care of American destiny." Further he says: "If it was wise for the United States through Secretary Marcy thirty-eight years ago to offer to expend $100,000 to secure a treaty of annexation, it certainly cannot be chimerical or unwise to expend $100,000 to secure annexation in the near future."

These declarations show his disposition and condition of mind. In a letter to the Secretary of State March 8, 1892, Minister Stevens says that the existing Government may be overthrown and adds that, while in those circumstances the ordinary rules would be to limit the landing and movement of United States troops to the protection of American citizens and their property, yet the United States' relations to Hawaii are exceptional. He adds: "I desire to know how far the present Minister and naval commander may deviate from established international rules and precedents in contingencies indicated in the first part of this dispatch."

To a minister of this temper, full of zeal for annexation, there seemed to arise in January, 1893, the precise opportunity for which he was watchfully waiting—an opportunity which, by timely "deviation from established international rules and precedents," might be improved to successfully accomplish the great object in view, and we are quite prepared for the exultant enthusiasm with which, in a letter to the State Department dated Feb. 1, 1893, he declares: "The Hawaiian pear is now fully ripe and this is the golden hour for the United States to pluck it."

It may also be remarked that this diplomatic representative on the day the above letter was written, apparently unable to longer restrain his ardor, issued a proclamation, in which "by the name of the United States" he assumed the protection of the Hawaiian Islands. This assumption was promptly disavowed by our government, but the American flag remained over the Government Building at Honolulu and the forces remained on guard until April and after Mr. Blount's arrival on the scene, when both were removed.

On Saturday, Jan. 14, 1893, the Queen of Hawaii, in deference to the wishes of her Cabinet, relinquished a proposed proclamation of a new constitution. Taking this relinquished purpose as a basis of action, citizens of Honolulu numbering from 50 to 100, mostly resident aliens, met in a private office and selected a so-called Committee of Safety, composed of thirteen persons, seven of whom were foreign subjects. This committee had in view annexation to the United States, and between Saturday, the 14th, and the following Monday, the 16th, they were certainly in communication with the United States Minister. At the call and under the auspices of this Committee of Safety a mass-meeting of citizens was held on Monday to protest against the Queen's alleged illegal and unlawful proceedings and purposes. At this meeting the Committee of Safety procured the passage of a resolution denouncing the Queen and empowering the committee to devise ways and means to secure the permanent maintenance of law and order and the protection of life, liberty and property in Hawaii.

This meeting adjourned between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. On Tuesday and immediately after such adjournment the committee, unwilling to take further steps without the co-operation of the United States Minister, addressed a note, representing that the public safety was menaced and that lives and property were in danger, and concluded as follows:

"We are unable to protect ourselves without aid, and therefore pray for protection of the United States forces."

Landing of the Marines.

When the note was written and delivered the committee, so far as it appears, had neither a man nor a gun at their command and after its delivery they became so panic-stricken at their position that they sent some of their number to interview the minister and request him not to land the United States forces till the next morning, but he replied that the troops had been ordered and whether the committee were ready or not the landing should take place. And so it happened on Jan. 16, 1893, between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon a detachment of marines from the United States steamer Boston, with two pieces of artillery, landed at Honolulu. The men, upward of 160 in all, were supplied with double cartridge belts, filled with ammunition and with haversacks and canteens and were accompanied by a hospital corps with stretchers and medical supplies.

This demonstration was an act of war unless made with the consent of the Hawaiian Government or to protect American citizens. The Hawaiian Government protested against the act and there was no need to protect American citizens.

If any peril to life and property calling for any such martial array had existed Great Britain and other foreign powers interested would have been behind the United States in an effort to protect their citizens. But they made no signs in that direction.

Thus it appears that Hawaii was taken possession of by the United States forces without the consent or wish of the government of the islands or of anybody else so far as is shown, except the United States Minister.

When our Minister recognized the Provisional Government the only basis upon which it rested was the fact that the Committee of Public Safety had in the manner above stated declared it to exist. That it was not in such possession of the Government property and agencies as entitled it to recognition is conclusively proved by a note found in the files of the legation at Honolulu addressed by the declared head of the provisional government to Minister Stevens dated Jan. 17, 1893, in which he acknowledged with expressions of appreciation the minister's recognition of the provisional government and stated that it is not yet in the possession of the station house (the place where a large number of the Queen's troops were quartered), though the same had been demanded of the Queen's officers in charge.

In yielding, however, the Queen protested that she did so because of the superior force of the United States, and only until such time as the United States government at Washington should, upon presentation of the facts, undo the action of its representative and reinstate her in the authority she claimed as the constitutional sovereign of the Hawaiian Islands. Yet the provisional government, with this unanswered protest in its hand, hastened to negotiate with the United States for the permanent banishment of the Queen from power and for a sale of her kingdom.

Danger of Government Disgrace.

Our country was in danger of occupying the position of having actually set up a temporary government on foreign soil for the purpose of acquiring through that agency territory which we had wrongfully put in our possession. This is in marked contrast to President Jackson's course after the battle of San Jacinto, by which Texan independence was practically assured and established. President Jackson refused to recognize it, alleging as one of his reasons that in the circumstances it became the United States "to beware of a too early movement, as it might subject us, however unjustly, to the imputation of seeking to establish the claim of our neighbors to a territory with a view to its subsequent acquisition by ourselves."

I believe that a candid and thorough examination of the facts will force the conviction that the provisional government owes its existence to an armed invasion by the United States.

While naturally sympathizing with every effort to establish a republican form of government, it is the settled policy of the United States to concede the people of foreign countries the same freedom and independence in the management of their domestic affairs that we have always claimed for ourselves.

But for the landing of the United States forces upon false pretexts respecting the danger to life and property, the committee would never have exposed themselves to the pains and penalties of treason by undertaking the subversion of the Queen's Government. But for the presence of the United States forces in the immediate vicinity and in position to afford all needed protection and support the committee would not have proclaimed the provisional government from the steps of the Government building, and, finally, but for the lawless occupation of Honolulu under false pretexts by the United States forces and but for Minister Stevens' recognition of the Provisional Government when the United States forces were its sole support and constituted its only military strength, the Queen and her government would never have yielded to the Provisional Government, even for a time, and for the sole purpose of submitting her case to the enlightened justice of the United States.

Believing, therefore, that the United States could not, under the circumstances disclosed, annex the islands without justly incurring the imputation of acquiring them by unjustifiable methods, I shall not again submit the treaty of annexation to the Senate for its consideration, and in the instructions to Minister Willis, a copy of which accompanies this message, I have directed him to so inform the provisional government.

A government of a feeble but friendly and confiding people has been overthrown. A substantial wrong has thus been done which a due regard for our national character as well as the rights of the injured people requires that we should endeavor to repair. The representatives of the provisional Government assert that the people of Hawaii are unfit for popular government and frankly avow that they can best be ruled by an arbitrary or despotic power.

But in the present instance our duty does not, in my opinion, end with refusing to consummate this questionable transaction. The United States cannot fail to vindicate its honor and its sense of justice by an earnest effort to make all possible reparation. These principles apply to the present case with irresistible force when the special conditions of the Queen's surrender of her sovereignty are recalled. She surrendered, not to the provisional government, but to the United States. She surrendered not absolutely and permanently, but temporarily and conditionally until such time as the facts could be considered by the United States. Furthermore, the provisional government acquiesced in her surrender in that manner. The members of the provisional government and their supporters, though not entitled to extreme sympathy, have been led to their present predicament of revolt against the government of the Queen by the indefensible encouragement and assistance of our diplomatic representative.

Terms Proposed to the Queen.

I hoped that after the provisional government was assured that annexation could not be consummated I might encompass a peaceful adjustment of the difficulty. Hence I instructed Minister Willis to advise the Queen and her supporters of my desire to aid in the restoration of the status existing before the lawless use of our forces on Jan. 16 last, if such restoration could be effected upon terms providing for clemency as well as justice to all parties concerned. The conditions proposed contemplated a general amnesty to those concerned in setting up the provisional government and a recognition of all its bona-fide acts and obligations. In short, they require that the past should be buried and that the restored government should resume its authority as if its continuity had not been interrupted. These conditions have not proved acceptable to the Queen, and though she has been informed that they will be insisted upon and that unless acceded to the efforts of the President to aid in the restoration of her government will cease, I have not thus far learned that she is willing to yield them her acquiescence.

The check which my plans have thus encountered has prevented their presentation to the members of the provisional government, while unfortunate public misrepresentations of the situation and exaggerated statements of the sentiments of our people obviously injured the prospects of successful executive mediation. I therefore submit this communication with its accompanying exhibits, embracing Mr. Blount's report, the evidence and statements taken by him at Honolulu, the instructions given to both Mr. Blount and Minister Willis and correspondence connected with the affair in hand. In commending this subject to the extended powers and wide discretion of the Congress I desire to add the assurance that I shall be much gratified to co-operate in any legislative plan which may be devised for the solution of the problem before us which is consistent with American honor, integrity and morality.

Hoosier Happenings

SOME coon hunters in Harrison County last week caught a wild cat.

THE widow of Patrick Tuhey at Muncie, fell down stairs, receiving injuries that proved fatal.

IT is claimed to be a mistake that many families in Brazil are suffering from destitution.

AT Anderson James Maloney, of Peru, went to sleep on the tracks at the round house and was run over. His legs were badly crushed and death relieved him of his sufferings.

JOHN BADGLEY, a prosperous farmer, living west of Pendleton, was caught under a tree, which he had cut to secure a coon. Before the tree could be removed life was extinct.

MR. HARMAN HEITMAN, a prominent grocer of Seymour, aged 46 years, died of typhoid malarial fever and derangement of the brain. He leaves a widow and three daughters.

CRAWFORDSVILLE High School scholars are on the war-path because dancing after school hours has been forbidden. They claim that they helped buy the school piano to use for dancing purposes.

WILLIAM STIFFLER of Muncie, has brought suit against the Common Sense Engine Company, asking $10,000 for the loss of an eye. An emery wheel which he was working with burst, causing the accident.

THE number of the unemployed at Terre Haute is now placed at 3,000. In several instances employes have agreed to set aside a fixed amount of their wages for the relief of the unemployed. The G. A. R. post and the relief corps have taken measures to raise funds for the relief of destitute soldiers and their families.

EDWARD HUNTSEN, an employe of the Columbus Starch Works, was the victim of a peculiar accident that will cost him his eye-sight. Huntsen is an engineer, and while looking at the Water-gauge to measure the quantity of water in the boiler one of the glass tubes bursted and broken pieces of glass struck him fairly in the eyes, cutting them both out.

WHEN the Air-line train pulled in Princeton the other night a child that had been deserted by its mother was turned over to the police. It was a babe of two weeks, a bright little fellow who had been placed in one of the rear seats and left tied up in a bundle. It is not known where the mother got on or off the train. The little one's linen is of the finest quality, and it is a mystery how a mother could desert so sweet a child. The infant cooed contentedly while officer Kerr carried it to his home, where it still remains. Policeman Kerr will adopt the child if not claimed.

JAMES E. STONE, the Wratten murderer, in the prison south awaiting execution, received a letter from his wife announcing the death of his 16-year-old daughter, who was a victim of consumption. At the time of the wholesale butchery of the Wrattens it was thought that she could not live but a few days. Stone wrote a long letter to his dying daughter a few days ago, telling her not to fear death and to prepare to meet him in Heaven on February 16, the time set for his execution. He expressed himself as glad that there would be some one to meet him there on that day.

A SEVERE windstorm that came from the southwest struck Muncie the other night. The most damage was done on the public square. C. S. Wachtell & Son's business block, on the north side of the square, was partially wrecked. Two-thirds of the immense roof was raised and carried a hundred feet east, where it dropped on the new Times building damaging it seriously. Wachtell's building is a new three-story structure. The Small Block and other buildings were slightly damaged. There is much wonder that no one was killed. The telegraph, telephone, and electric street-car and light wires are down, street cars were stopped and many lights and telephones are useless.

SEVERAL weeks ago Gas City was visited by oil prospectors from Pennsylvania, and indications were so strong that it was decided to put down a test well. The result of this well has been looked ahead to with much interest. The other day oil was found, and visitors were excluded, the derrick being inclosed. The projectors of the scheme are close mouthed as clams as to the amount of oil found. It is only known that oil has been found and some has been tanked. The prospectors have been quietly letting contracts for more wells in the vicinity and are buying up all the oil leases which can be obtained hereabouts. It is thought by everybody that a big well has been struck and that an oil boom is imminent.

THE Indiana State Grange in session at Seymour, elected the following officers to serve the ensuing year: Master, Aaron Jones of South Bend; Overseer, J. S. Davis of Columbus; Lecturer, F. S. S. Robinson of Cloverdale; Steward, Hiram Henderson of Heltonville; Assistant Steward, R. J. McCallion of Attica; Chaplain, Milten Trusler of Bently; Treasurer, J. W. Holmes of Cortland; Secretary, J. H. Walker of Adams; Gate keeper, O. M. Curry of Terre Haute; Cerus, Lizzie A. Reuff; Pomono, Mrs. A. R. M. Sawden; Flora, Laura Robinson of Cloverdale; Lady Assistant Steward, Mrs. John Hays of Frankfort; Executive Committee, T. H. Walington of Madison; John Tilson of Franklin, and L. S. Fitch of Oakwood.

GEORGE GOODENOUGH, for many years a locomotive engineer with the Pennsylvania road, but retired on account of defective hearing, was run down by a Nickel Plate passenger train at Ewing street, Fort Wayne, and so badly injured that he died shortly after.

MISS GRACE BERRIDGE, a young society woman of Evansville, awoke the other morning and found that she had been relieved of a beautiful head of hair during the night. She is almost heart-broken over the outrage. The detectives are investigating, but have found no clew to work on.

THERE is considerable excitement at Seymour among railroad employes about the contemplated removal of the B. & O. S. W. train dispatcher's office, which has been located in that city for several years, to Washington. An official of the company said that buildings are being prepared near the shops in that city, and that the offices would be moved about Jan. 1. The rumor about the removal of the freight division to North Vernon has not been verified, and it is not believed it will take place. Should the division be changed it will necessitate the removing of the train men to that place, which would be a loss of over one hundred families to Seymour

UTAH IS CLAMORING.

WANTS TO JOIN THE SISTERHOOD OF STATES.

Delegate Rawlins Stirs Up the House—Resents Criticism from New-Englanders—Mr. Harter Objected to Any More Small States.

Utah at the Door.

Washington correspondence:

THE House has considered and granted Utah's petition for Statehood. The members had considerable sport in discussing the matter when it was first introduced. The discussion began slowly and quietly with speeches from Messrs. Kilgore, of Texas, and Morse, of Massachusetts. Spice was added by Mr. Rawlins, the delegate from Utah, who in his maiden speech was listened to with marked attention by every one on the floor and in the galleries. His remarks were strengthened with sharp satire and humorous comparisons, and were frequently interrupted by laughter. The great success of the day was his apostrophe to New England as the country which burned witches, persecuted Quakers, turned out Roger Williams, and produced the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Morse). Mr. Rawlins was followed by Mr. Harter, of Ohio, in opposition. Although the interest flagged somewhat when the change of speakers was accomplished, it was soon reawakened.

In defending his plea Delegate Rawlins said: "There is less polygamy in Utah than in Massachusetts. When a gentleman gets up here, as did the gentleman from Massachusetts, and asserts that the people of Utah are assassins, thieves, bigamists, and makes assertions without a syllable of evidence to back them up, and refuses to accept the evidence of reputable people of Utah, Idaho and Wyoming in their defense, I say he ought to hang his head in shame." "Not a syllable of evidence?" retorted Mr. Morse. "I have read the book of Brigham Young's fifteenth wife, and she ought to know." "The people of Utah," said Mr. Rawlins, "and the leaders of the Mormon Church have no wish to revive polygamy. The law providing for the admission of Utah revoked the obnoxious Edmunds-Tucker act, which is an insult to the people. I think I know the people who will dominate affairs if this bill should pass, and you will never regret your action if you pass this bill."

Mr. Harter spoke in opposition to the measure, saying there was no hardship and less expense all around in living under territorial government. Besides, he was opposed to small States. Said he: "I object to the bill solely on the ground that Utah does not have sufficient population. There are too many States in the Union which are too small, and Delaware and Rhode Island would not be admitted to the sisterhood of States in this day. They fought their way. Let us digest our dinner of new States before we go to our supper. Let us civilize Kansas before we take in other States. The last seven States admitted to the Union have not grown as rapidly as States as they have under territorial form of government, and they are represented by fourteen Senators at the other end of the Capitol—a representation entirely out of proportion to their population."

Routine Business.

Tuesday, in the Senate, Mr. Cullom spoke in favor of the federal election law. Mr. Stewart was heard against it, and in favor of silver. The Senate confirmed many nominations, among them that of Washington Hesing for Postmaster at Chicago. The day in the House was characterized by an interesting and amusing debate on the bill to admit Utah. The only actual legislation accomplished was the passage of the bill reported by Mr. Dingley changing the method of making remittances in the Postoffice Department. Instead of being sent to the Sixth Auditor through the Postoffice Department they are to be hereafter sent to the Sixth Auditor direct.

The bill for the admission of Utah to Statehood was passed without division by the House Wednesday, the only amendments of importance being one by Mr. Powers, prohibiting polygamy forever and another by Mr. Wheeler reducing one-half the land granted to the State for common school purposes. The resolution of Mr. Hitt calling for the correspondence in the Hawaiian affair, amended so as to include an extension of the period to be covered by the correspondence to March, 1889, the beginning of the Harrison administration, was passed. The Myer resolution for the appointment of a joint committee to examine the rank, pay, and other questions relating to the navy was passed. Mr. Holman introduced a resolution to investigate the question of premiums earned by contractors for government war vessels. The Senate considered nothing but the Hawaiian question.

In the House Thursday a bill to improve methods of accounting in the Postoffice Department was called up. Without any discussion the bill was passed. Bills were passed granting patents to settlers in Arkansas and for the relief of those having made settlement in Oregon and Washington under the "donation act" of 1850. In the Senate the House bill to repeal the federal election laws was reported back favorably. The Senate joint resolution relieving employes was passed. Also the House bill for two additional Justices of the Supreme Court for the Territory of Oklahoma, with amendments. The Senate adjourned until Monday.

President Cleveland's message transmitting the papers in relation to Hawaii brought on a warm discussion in both houses. An attack on the President's policy as to pensions was made by General Sickles in a speech in the House. In the Senate Mr. Dolph talked on the tariff and Mr. Hansbrough pleaded for $1,000,000 to exterminate the Russian thistle. A resolution to loan the Columbus caravels to the Red Cross Society for exhibition purposes was presented in the Senate.

SANTA CLAUS' JOURNEY.

ON a cold winter morning old Santa Claus rose,
And looking about him espied his new clothes;
The first garment he chose had an icicle fringe,
He drew the next on with a squirm and a scringe,
He buttoned a vest with polar diamonds bedecked,
Jumped into a coat with white snowflakes beflecked,
And then wrapped 'round his neck a long scarf from the wind
That fluttered and rattled and clattered behind;
He also put on his head a soft downy cap,
And a white bearskin in the sleigh for his lap;
Then Santa Claus grasped for a staff an icicle stout,
And thought on his journey he soon would set out.
Santa's breakfast was deersteak and bearsteak and whale,
His drink was icewater and not poison ale;
His champagne being oxygen hydrogen gas,
Which made him feel gay as a colt turned to grass;
He then rang for Jack Frost, his brisk man of all work,
Who brought the deer 'round with a jump and a jerk;
He then seated himself just in front of the load,
And drove his reindeer to a smooth, glassy road,
On which they turned south with a bound and a snort,
And thought this fine morning 'twas nothing but sport
To fly over the world with bells all ajingle
And carry this load for merry Kris Kringle.
Gaily onward they move with swift, untiring feet,
With eyes brightly glowing and beauty complete,
With rhythmical motion, with feet diamond shod,
Glide over vast ice-fields no human hath trod;
And through billowy snowdrifts of mountainous height,
O'er plains and through forests they take their wild flight;
The wild deer and the wolf only crossing their track,
The deer fleeing lone before wolves in a pack;
The pale sun shining brightly as onward they go,
The branches above them o'erburdened with snow,
They soon leave far behind them this mystical land
Of white feath'ry forests, dense, solemn and grand.
They come to the place where the genus homo live,
The little socks gaping cry "Give, Santa, give!"
They speed on to the East and dash back to the West,
Then fly to the South never pausing to rest;
While they scatter vast treasures along their gay route,
And leave the home geni, to place them to suit.
Thus for children and babies old Santa provides,
While onward and on like a whirlwind he rides,
He goes so far South he nearly sticks in the mud,
His poor deer are drooping, his diamonds no good;
So he connects with the harness a few dynamoes,
And then to his home on a flash of light goes.

XMAS ON THE PRAIRIE

WINTER in Western Kansas. A vast expanse of level landscape, dotted here and there by the leafless treetops of some scant grove or outline of a far-off habitation, stretched away until it seemed that hours or days of patient wagon travel brought no progress toward the receding horizon. Along the road a moving speck from the west crept steadily toward a point near the eastern horizon where a cluster of roofs and smoking chimneys revealed the presence of the promising town of A——, which had reached the mature age of five years when the lengthening shadows of the short December day confirmed the calendar record that Christmas eve of 188- was hovering over the land to hide the rapid approach from the mysterious regions of the north of the reindeer sleigh loaded with countless gifts and driven by the great patron saint of childhood, the renowned and generous Santa Claus.

"No Christmas for us, Helen!" And a hand browned in sun and wind rested pityingly, with a half-furtive caress, upon the shoulder of a woman whose blue eyes and mobile features looked out with pathetic sadness foreign to her years from the canvas cover of the wagon upon whose seat her husband and herself had preserved an unwonted silence during that long day's ride.

"No, Robert, nor for the children. And how differently we had planned for this Christmas Eve!" And a tear-dimmed glance caught her husband's face, as if seeking some ray of encouragement where she knew love reigned even among the set lines of grim endurance that were becoming permanently indexed there.

"Maybe," said a childish voice from among the warm blankets behind the seat, "Santa Claus is coming to that town over there, and he will frow us sumpin' out o' his sleigh as he goes by!"

The mother gave a little shiver and made no reply. The husband, in a low tone, said:

"No, little woman; no Christmas for you or for the children this time. The prairie fire that swept away in one short hour the work of five hard years in making us a home was our present this year—from the overruling hand of an all-wise Providence, the traveling elder called it, didn't he? Christmas is for people who have houses and homes and comfort; not for campers along the road. But let us only manage to get back to the old Iowa farm that I can rent and we'll try to forget the Christmas we don't have out in this country! And," he added in a kinder tone, "you know you have said yourself we've seen worse nights than this and worse days than to-morrow is likely to be."

"If I could only forget that terrible night, Robert, but it comes to me in my dreams! I see the roaring line of flame and smoke rushing like 10,000 demons over the prairie. I see it reach the claim. I hear Harry crying to get to the dugout, where you had hurried us and the few things we could save. I see you dash back into the burning house, but I cannot see you as I did that night, rushing back again, holding our boy high up above the flames that darted at you like red-hot, hissing snakes! My dream leaves you with that awful surge of fire between us, and I gasp with the horror of it until you wake me to find we are still together. Waking, I know you are safe and getting over those frightful burns. If I could only forget that night I might feel like myself again. Oh! if this Christmas eve or Christmas day would only take away that horrible dream it would be Christmas enough for me!"

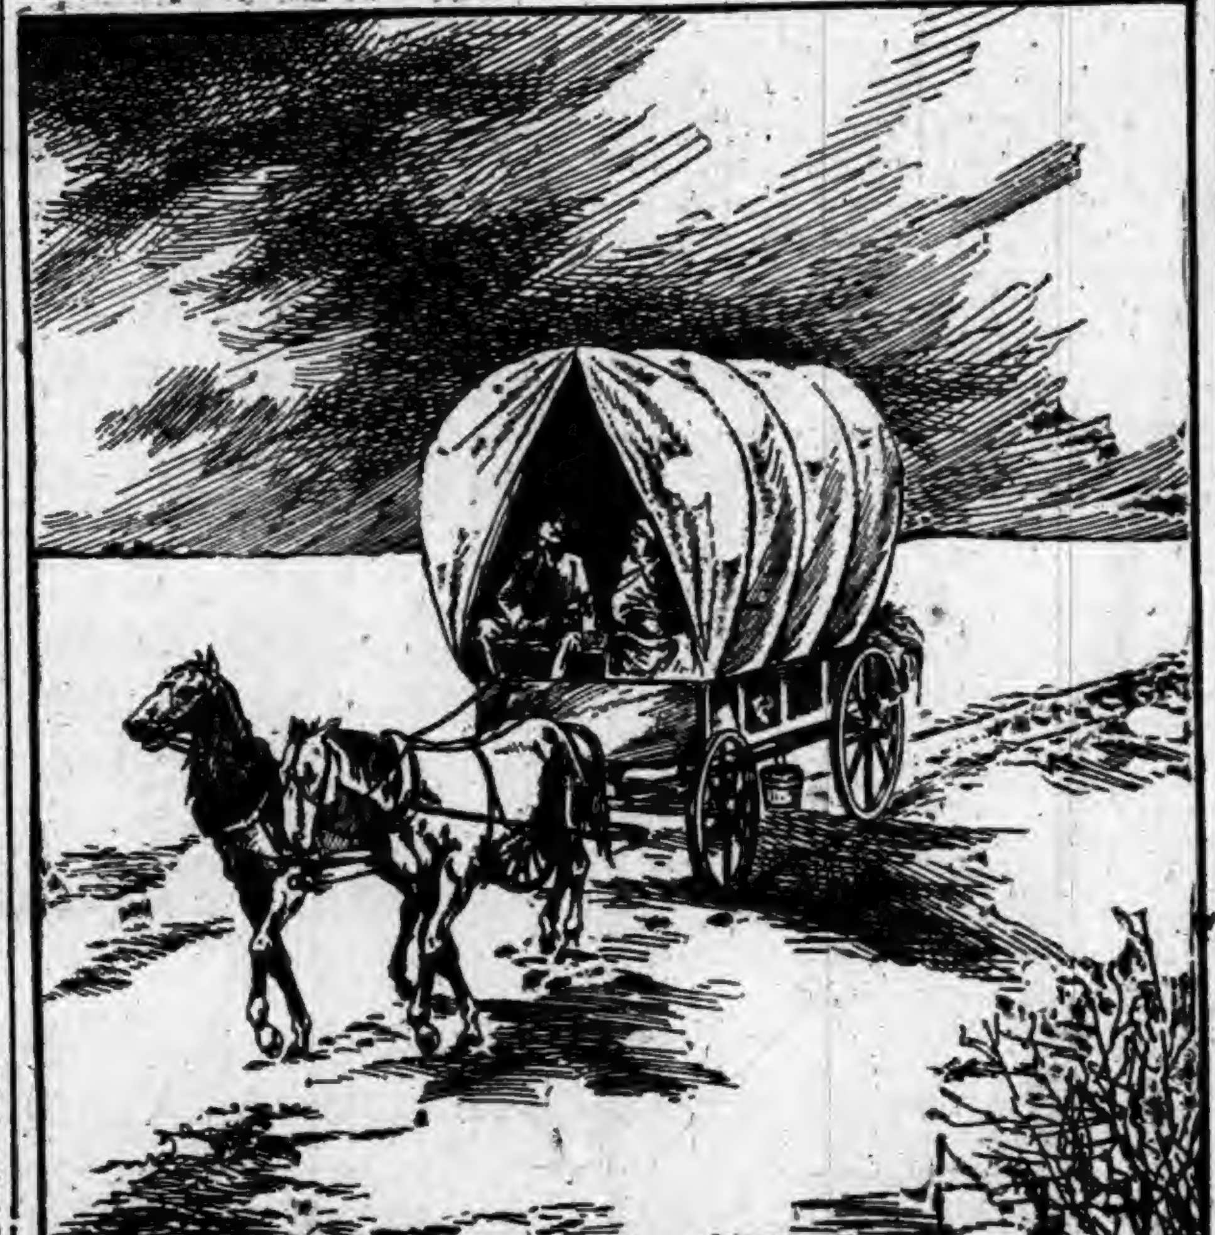
Merrily pealed the new church bell by the grove in which the prairie voyagers had halted for the night. Every window and the open doors sending rays of cheerful light into the surrounding gloom serves to guide a fast-gathering throng of young and old to Sunday-school celebration of Christmas eve. Watching with longing eyes this unwonted spectacle, two children crept hand in hand toward the church, and as the music of a sweet Christmas anthem floated out into the night it drew them irresistibly to see for themselves the wonders that were within. Two wistful, childish faces, peering with wide-eyed astonishment at the wonderfully lighted tree, bearing such strange variety of fruit, caught the attention of kind-hearted observers. A story soon went around: "Camping children—parents lost most everything in the great Ford County prairie fire—traveling overland back to Iowa—no Christmas for them—Santa Claus only went to houses that had chimneys to go down."

A sudden wave of sympathy swept over the room. Here were unexpected visitors from the great expanse, little ones who expected no Santa Claus, whose parents could give them no Christmas. In his name welcome and send them on their way rejoicing. Hurried consultations were held. A young voice said: "Give them my present." "Give them mine," "And mine," followed, until it seemed that giving was indeed more blessed than receiving. Presents showered from the wonderful tree. The choir broke out in another anthem of praise, and the parents, beginning to feel alarmed at the unexpected length of absence, met their children coming from the church with a boy lugging a basket of gifts for them and bringing the message direct from Santa Claus himself, whom the children had seen in white fur and a long white beard, "Merry Christmas to the family in the prairie schooner!"

Christmas Day! The interminable stretch of earth and sky, of half-white herbage, of road without beginning or ending, of the tireless wind, of distance everywhere. On the Western horizon the faded housetops of a receding town. Again the canvas-covered craft creeping onward toward the Eastern horizon. Behind the seat the happy chatter of childish voices over undreamed-of treasures. In front, snuggled together like a pair of lovers beginning their first journey, the husband and wife smiled encouragement at each other and the passing wind caught the sweet-voiced words:

"Robert, I missed my dream last night. The good Santa Claus who sent the children back with so many beautiful presents took away the horror of the prairie fire so that I feel its spell is broken. How kind the people were to strangers they never saw before. Oh, Robert, this is Christmas Day for us after all? The sun shines brighter than yesterday. It's the happiest day I have seen in months. I wish you a merry Christmas, Robert," and she paused for his reply.

"Helen, there is more in Christmas than I ever knew. It puts hearts in people, Helen; that's what it does, and keeps the world together. I don't feel now that we're cut off by ourselves out on this great prairie. Christmas is for everybody, and I say merry Christmas to you and to the children, and to the people of that town behind us. Merry Christmas, with all my heart, to everybody everywhere!"



CHRISTMAS ON THE PRAIRIE.

Christmas Shopping.

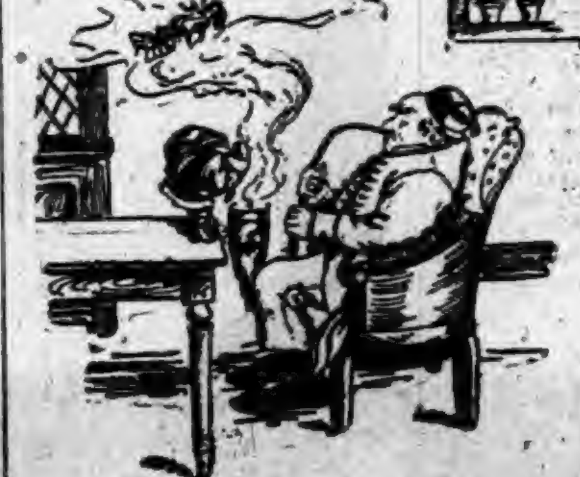
Christmas shopping is more often than otherwise a serious burden, and is also likely to prove as much of a confusion as it is a laborious process. The following is a plan of a clever woman, who declares that by her simple method she has eliminated all that is either vexing or overtaxing in regard to it. Early in the season she makes out a list of persons to whom she wants to give presents. As she makes up her mind what she wants to give each person, she sets down whatever it is opposite the name. Then whenever she finds it convenient to get any of these gifts she does so, and at once inscribes and addresses the article and places it in a large drawer, which she keeps expressly for the purpose. She says that since she has adopted this plan Christmas is a joy and a delight, whereas before it was a time that she dreaded as a sort of Dead Sea fruit which she was bound to eat annually. It is not too late to make a book of this kind serviceable. It should be small enough so that it can be conveniently carried, in order that it may be at hand both as a reminder and to jot down such memoranda as may be desired to have.

Christmas on Monday.

Christmas falls on Monday this year. We have the authority of an old poetic philosopher for including this fact among the signs of a hard winter. The document, according to the London Times, "was unearthed in 1865 from the Harleian manuscripts, No. 2252, folios 153-4," in the British Museum. It reads as follows:

If Christmas day on Monday be,
A great winter that year you'll see,
And full of winds both loud and shrill;
But in summer, truth to tell,
High winds shall there be, and strong,
Full of tempests lasting long;
While battles they shall multiply,
And great plenty of beasts shall die.
They that be born that day, I ween,
They shall be strong each one and keen;
He shall be found that stealeth aught;
Tho' thou be sick thou diest not.

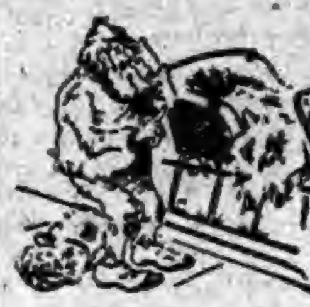
Santa Claus' Mistake.



Mr. Schaupenhauser falls asleep over his pipe, and Santa Claus at first sight takes it for a chimney.

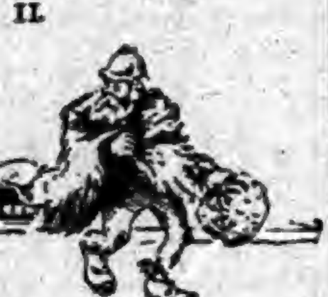
WEARY WHISKER'S XMAS MASQUERADE

I.



"Times is hard,"
says Weary Whisk'rs Christmas evening, rather late,
Kicks his toes against the sidewalk, rubs his hands and swears at fate.
"Times is hard, but that's no reason why a hansum man like me
Should be cheated out of Chrismus wid its fun and jollity."

II.



"There's a likely lookin' cutter, mus' belong to Santy Claus,
And that fancy fur-lined lap-robe looks to me as if it was Left for me—for Weary Whiskers—much obliged to you, St. Nick;
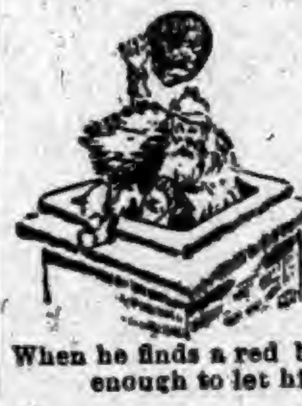
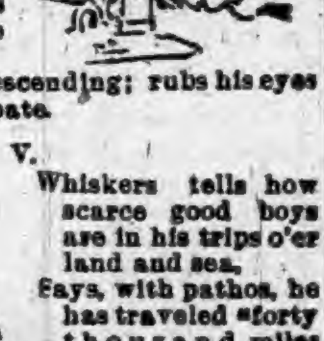
But the owner soon will miss it. Guess I'll leave here pretty quick."

III.



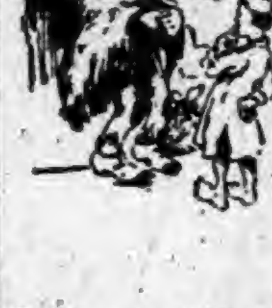
With his pack and bearskin lap-robe Whiskers looks like Santa's twin
As he stands on Robby's housetop wond'ring if he can't get in,
And his bosom throbs with triumph (though his lungs are full of gas)
When he finds a red brick chimney, large enough to let him pass.

IV.



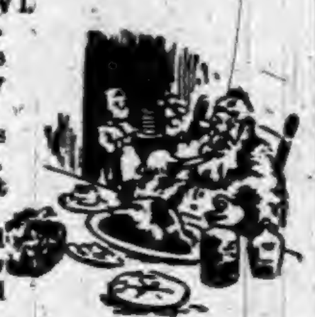
Meanwhile Robby, sweetly dreaming in his little trundle bed
Of the morrow with its presents, hears a rumbling near his head,
Wakes and sees the feet of Whiskers dangling in the open grate,
Slowly, carefully descending; rubs his eyes and then his pate.

V.



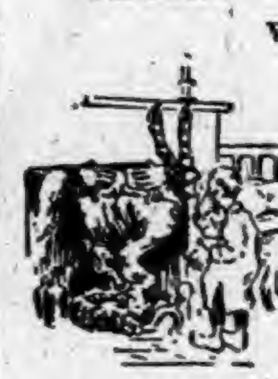
Whiskers tells how scarce good boys are in his trips o'er land and sea,
Says, with pathos, he has traveled "forty thousand miles since tea."
Then tells Robby if he'll get him something for his appetite
He can have a million presents, every one "just out of sight."

VI.



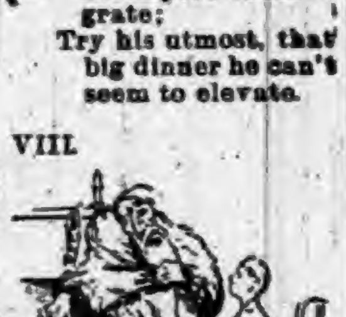
Robby eagerly escorts him to the table thickly spread
With to-morrow's Christmas dinner, and his eyes start from his head,
When he sees old Whiskers swallow everything and call for more,
Till the pantry is as hollow as his stomach was before.

VII.



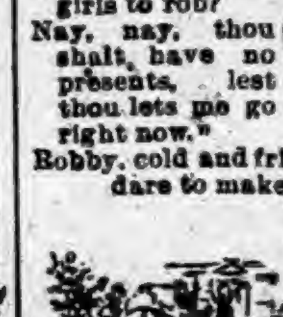
Then he blesses little Robby, tells him to go back to bed:
When he wakes up in the morn, he'll find a reindeer at his head—
But alas! when up the chimney he attempted to emigrate;
Try his utmost, that big dinner he can't seem to elevate.

VIII.



"Robert, thou hast done this evil," Whiskers says to little Bob;
"Think ye, ye can here detain me, other boys and girls to rob?
Nay, nay, thou shalt have no presents, lest thou lets me go right now."
Robby, cold and frightened, shivers, doesn't dare to make a row.

IX.



Whiskers follows thro' the parlor, picks up Robby's Christmas tree,
Thinks he'll sell it to his "Uncle" for two dollars, maybe three;
Waves good-bye to little Robby as he shuffles down the path,
Then makes tracks for Oklahoma to avoid his papa's wrath.

"It was a terrible mistake!" "Tell me of it." "A number of presents given me last Christmas I had no use for, and, being a little short of funds this year, I gave them as Christmas presents to my friends. But I didn't remember aright as to just whom I got them from, and, by Jove! I gave Miss Lovely the exact album she presented me with."—Ex.

Scientific Toys.

If a paterfamilias of 1792 could be allowed to roam around here for a few days, in this holiday season, he would probably demand to be returned whence he came with all possible haste, claiming that we are a generation of sorcerers. For even the toys exhibited in the shop windows, and destined for Christmas presents to our little ones, would impress the venerable ghost as the products of sorcery. The tiny locomotive drawing its train of cars would frighten him seriously: and as for the electrical devices, he would flee from them as from Beelzebub himself.

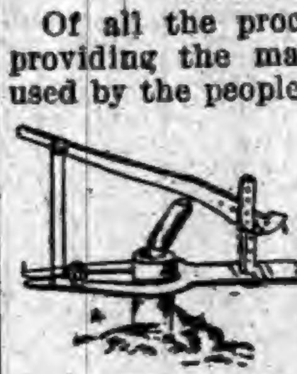
SUGAR MANUFACTURE

ONE OF THE GREATEST INDUSTRIES OF THE AGE.

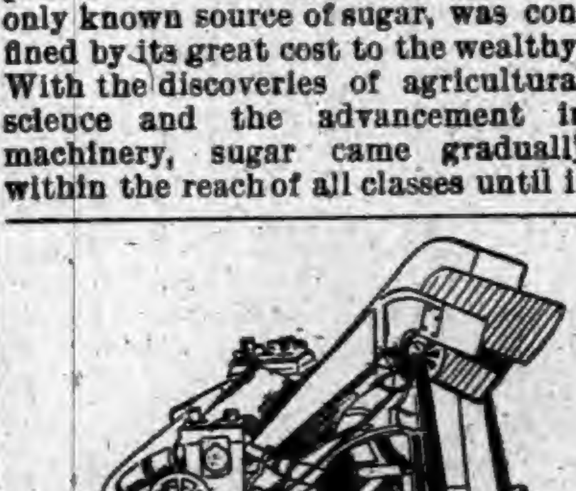
By Powerful Machinery and Complicated Processes Is Produced the Familiar Substance So Necessary to Life—Great Reduction in Its Cost.

How It Is Made.



A PRIMITIVE MILL.

Of all the processes employed in providing the many kinds of food used by the people of the earth none are so complicated as those of the making of sugar, and no industry of the present day is larger or more important. In the early days of sugar making in Europe, and as late as the 16th century, the use of the product of the sugar cane, then the only known source of sugar, was confined by its great cost to the wealthy. With the discoveries of agricultural science and the advancement in machinery, sugar came gradually within the reach of all classes until it is now one of the commonest necessities of life and has largely conduced to the health of nations. There can be little doubt that India is the oldest sugar-maker, as in the land of Buddha are yet to be found machines for sugar-making which have apparently survived from the earliest times. The mere operation of extracting the juice from the cane has undergone little modification since the early days of sugar-making, for the machines of to-day consist of rollers, the only difference being that more force is exerted in the modern machines, thereby adding to the yield of juice. It is the processes employed after the juice is obtained that have grown complicated as the industry has grown old.



POWERFUL SUGAR-MILL OF TO-DAY.

Boiling Down the Juice.

As soon as it is freed from the canes the juice, which looks like dirty water, flows to a reservoir, where a small quantity of quicklime is added to neutralize the nitrogenous substances in the juice. Thence it is conveyed to the boiling-pans, which are arranged in a row with a fire under one end, the flue passing under all the pans to a chimney at the end. The juice is placed in the pan farthest from the fire. Before it is removed the thick scum which has arisen to the top is skimmed off. This is repeated in the case of each removal to a pan nearer to the fire, so that by the time the juice, or more properly sirup, has reached the hottest pan it is comparatively free from impurities. In this last pan the sirup boils with great vigor. It is this that the sirup seems to require to make it crystallize properly. But too great a heat has a bad effect on the sirup, so the process of boiling from this point is continued in vacuum pans from which the air has been exhausted by air pumps. Here under a low temperature it is concentrated until it has crystallized to the proper degree, when it is placed in drainers. In these after a certain length of time, varying from a few hours to several weeks according to the quality of the product to be obtained, there will be left a quantity of dry sugar. The drainings, comprising molasses and uncrystallized syrup, are put back into the vacuum pans and the process repeated until all the sugar has been extracted. The dry sugar obtained in this manner is then ready for shipment to the refineries.

The Processes of Refining.

These in brief are the processes employed in making crude sugar. Sometimes the refineries are located at a considerable distance from the plantation mills, but the more advanced planters now run their own refineries, which are buildings generally from eight to nine stories in height. The crude sugar is conveyed to the top story, where it is mixed with pure water, just as little of the latter being used as possible. This solution is then run through a series of filters filled with animal charcoal, which removes all of the coloring matter. When it has gone through this process the solution is almost pure sugar and water. To extract this water boiling is necessary, but heat makes the sugar dark colored again, so the vacuum pan is again resorted to. Even with this the sugar is turned quite brown. When sufficiently concentrated the product is run into vessels from which the syrup remaining after crystallization is allowed to drain. At length a strong colorless solution of sugar and water is poured into the tops of these vessels and after this has thoroughly drained away, taking with it the brown, sticky treacle or molasses, the sugar is ready for the final process, which consists of baking in an oven heated with steam. In this oven the sugar is covered with paper to prevent its turning black. From the oven come forth the beautiful white crystals which hold so prominent a place among the staple articles of food of the present day. We have only touched upon cane-sugar making in this article, for the reason that it is the most important among the branches of the sugar industry. The processes of producing sugar from beets and other sources differ only in the manner of extracting the juice.

Testimonial.

When Mrs. J. H. St. Clair, of Hawley, Kansas, was back a year or two ago, she bought a Swing Washer of Mr. Meesa. This last summer Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pommert, of this place, spent part of the summer with Mr. St. Clair's family, Mr. S., being a brother of Mrs. Pommert. The two ladies used the washing machine, and Mrs. Pommert became as enthusiastic over it, as was Mrs. St. Clair, and on her return to Auburn, she got one of her own, and uses it each week. Both ladies agree that it does its work quicker, better and is much pleasanter to work with, than any other machine. As it is closed, the steam does not escape to drench the walls, or to heat up the person, making it more pleasant to hang out the clothes. Both ladies authorize us to say that no washer they ever tried is equal to the Auburn Swing Washer. It is easy to operate and does its work quickly.

New Business Enterprise for Auburn.

It is now a fixed fact that Ralph W. Cobb will occupy the corner room in Gandy Block about February 1st. He will handle a full line of high grade bicycles, the best that money and skill can produce. All new models.

Mr. Cobb has been negotiating with leading factories for some time, and although he has closed but few contracts, on account of delay in getting out 1894 models and settling on prices for the coming year, we can rest assured he will have the cream and the lowest possible prices. With an establishment like this, devoted solely to this line, surely all may ride and know the luxuries and benefits derived from the wheel.

Mr. Cobb has had experience, not only with the wheel, but human nature in its many phases, and as the coming season promises to be the greatest year for bicycles ever known in this country, we predict for R. W. Cobb a large business.

Auburn, in itself, is a good wheel town, but many in the country and throughout the county and surrounding counties are falling into line with the easy, rapid, and healthful means of transit. Cycling is but in its infancy.

Mr. Cobb is well and favorably known as a pleasant, wide-awake and thorough business man, and we know the people of DeKalb county will experience pleasure in doing business with him, as they will get just what they bargain for—full value. Watch the enterprise.

The Illuminated Lecture.

The illuminated lecture given by Mr. Johnson at the Presbyterian church last Saturday afternoon and the same evening was not very well attended owing to the severity of the storm. But those who did go heard and saw two illustrated lectures of much more than ordinary ability and interest. The afternoon lecture was descriptive of the wonders of the world's fair, and those who are familiar with the marvels shown at the "White City" pronounce these pictures to be almost the reality. In the evening the lecture or sermon, as it really seemed, was one of marvelous interest and power. The speaker did not glide from one picture to another with that glib style so often noticed in illustrated lectures, but rather made the pictures illustrate the powerful sermon he was delivering to his audience. The story of the Savior from his birth to the grave "and beyond" was given an added and a fresher interest even to those who had heard the wonderful story many times. We are only sorry that more of our people could not be present to enjoy it.

THE Baldwin locomotive works have an order for 71 new engines from one railroad. That don't look as though our industries are going to pieces.

SOUTH CAROLINA'S strange liquor law seems to be very satisfactory. Amendments to it are being made, but no talk of repealing it. The state does all the selling through its licensed dealers.

SUGAR bounty is a howling fraud. Why should we take several years to get rid of it? It went into effect at one jump. Let it go out at one jump.

NEW tariff bill will help the workingmen, by increasing the amount of work done in factories. Workingmen cannot be worse off that they are now and have been under the McKinley law.

WHEN Americans get the proper amount of backbone they will not ask the government to patch up their pants, but will do it themselves. In the same way they should have backbone enough to carry on their business without asking the government to "protect" them.

GREAT bridge across the Ohio between Jeffersonville and Louisville, fell into the river last Friday caused by the wind loosening the frame work used to support the bridge, and so getting the ends of the bridge loose. Many men working on the bridge were thrown into the water and nearly all perished. The loss to the bridge company is about $100,000.

REPUBLICAN papers make great ado about "hauling down the flag" at Honolulu. At the same time they are saying that the present government there is a legitimate government. If it is the regular government, then what right had our flag flying over the city? Canada has a regular government. Would our flag have a right to float over a Canadian city?

The Twelfth District.

As politics never ceases in Indiana, the time will soon come for the democracy of the twelfth district to be looking the ground over for congressional timber for '94. For certainly with the existing condition of the democratic pulse of this district, our present congressman will not be re-nominated, nor could he be re-elected if nominated. Owing to McNagny's vacillating course since his election, he has created factions and strifes until he has utterly demoralized and disgusted his constituents with his weakness, and has proven himself wholly incapable of filling so high and honorable a position. Whenever a man of his caliber ignores the wishes and demands of his constituents and puts himself up as a dictator of his party, he is sure to fall where he should, into insignificance and obscurity. Then it behooves the democracy of the twelfth district to select as their standard bearer a man of sterling character, integrity and statesmanship, and one, too, who possesses the full confidence of his constituents, and who also can bring order out of chaos and harmonize the present factions, the latter a condition created and existing through the influences of our present congressman.

In naming a candidate for this important position, our choice would be a man who has already proven his ability, integrity, courage and leadership. An eminent jurist, one who has stood aloof from all factional quarrels, who has not identified himself with the A. P. A. (an organization un-democratic.) Our candidate's name is not only a household word in every family in the district, but a familiar name throughout the entire state. A man who has marshaled the democratic hosts in many hard fought battles. And in the language of David B. Hill, he can say, "I am a democrat." We now name for congress for the twelfth Indiana district, that gallant democratic war horse, Col. Robert C. Bell, of Allen.

* * *

The above letter is written by a well known democrat of this county and is in the same line of opinion that we hear every day. We have other communications of similar import, but have not thought best to publish them before. It is plain that our present congressman has lost his grip, if he ever had any.

Wild Politics.

We do not remember the time when there was so much wild, and even silly talk on political matters as now, though we never had a time when the actual facts were as easily obtained as at this very time. Go where you will and we hear this wild talk. We mention a few of the false statements made. First as to President Cleveland. They say he is trying to bulldoze congress. But he is not. He has recommended a few things to congress, which he thinks they should act upon. But every president from Washington to our time has done the same. Some have recommended ten things where Cleveland has one. Read the various presidential messages and see if this is not the truth. Again they say Cleveland is bossed by the "gold bugs." Look at Cleveland's life long course and see if he was ever "bossed" by any one. They say he is a "gold bug," by which is meant that he believes in gold money alone, and not in silver money. What word has Cleveland ever spoken that would lead any one to believe this of him? But suppose he does believe in gold money; other democrats can be found who believe the same; others can be found who believe in silver; others can be found who prefer paper money. They have a right to their beliefs, and no man has a right to heap abuse on a man for holding honestly to a certain belief. Then take Senator Voorhees. He has been lately accused of being "a traitor to silver," because he advocated the repeal of the purchasing clause only, of the Sherman act. Why did not these accusers examine Voorhees' bill before grumbling. His bill did not "kill silver." It merely repealed the "purchase clause" on which the government was losing about twenty millions a year. It did not disturb the coinage of silver or its legal tender quality. All the rest of the Sherman act continued in full force, and is still in force. The COURIER has often called attention to this. We have also said that Voorhees would in the proper time ask the passage of a bill compelling the government to coin a certain amount of silver each month. This bill he has now ready and has introduced it. It provides for the coinage of at least two millions a month. The Sherman act did not provide for coining any, and no silver was being coined under that act. How ridiculous then to call Voorhees an enemy to silver! Again, democrats are accused of bringing on these hard times. But remember, we are still living under the full tide of republican laws, many of which have been in force for many years. There is but one democratic law on the statute books—the law repealing the purchase clause of the Sherman act, to which we have just alluded. Again it is said that the proposed tariff legislation should be abandoned, because it "unsettled business." But republicans have changed the tariff laws about twenty times, and in neither case did they go about telling of the "danger of changing the tariff." They say, moreover, that no president before Cleveland ever sent a special embassador to a foreign country without consulting congress, as he did Mr. Blount to the Sandwich Islands. This is another falsehood, for the government records show 380 such cases. Even republicans are forced to admit at least thirty. Another false claim is, that republicans are better financiers. Cleveland at the close of his first term left Harrison about sixty millions of a surplus in the national treasury; and there was 198 millions of the gold reserve, while the revenues were about 100 millions a year more than was needed. When Harrison's four years ended, the sixty millions surplus was about wiped out; the 198 millions of gold reserve had run down to about 105 millions, and the revenues were hardly enough to keep up expenses. And the starving crowds that are being supported by charity in large cities are starving and begging through conditions forced on them, if by any laws, by laws made by republicans. And so we might go on enumerating. A good idea would be to wait, save wind, and in the course of time we will see better how matters stand.

Court.

Monday was the regular day for the beginning of the December term of court, but it did not begin as the work at Angola was not yet finished. It will be remembered that the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works had sued the county for $500 for extra work done when the new steam heaters were put in the court house last year. It appears that there was a misunderstanding, and the commissioners refused to allow the bill. The case was taken to Angola and began there last week, but was not finished, and will take all the week. The commissioners are trying to offset a part of the claim, as they say the firm guaranteed there would be no trouble about the draft of the chimney if the heaters were put in. Yet now they find they will have to build a new chimney at a cost of not less than $150. Judge Powers came down Monday as usual, but went back on the noon train, and court will not begin here till next Monday. Many criminal cases are waiting here, including the Deeters case, and as they come first, it looks as if there would be a poor show for ordinary civil cases this term.

Commissioners' Court.

Commissioners did not get done last week, as they were called away to court at Angola. So they will not meet to finish their work till after the COURIER goes to press, and we will not be able to report their proceedings till next week.

Notice.

McELREE'S WINE OF CARDUI for Weak Nerves.

Christmas next Monday.

Go to Kiblinger's for Holiday goods.

The L. L. C. meets this week with Mrs. Ford.

Nellie Richards has been on the sick list a few days.

Geo. Lanning is one of the latest victim of the grip.

See our toilet cases; prices will surprise you. Robbins & McCord's

GOOD HOUSE to rent, on south Cedar street. Inquire of Wm. H. McIntosh.

Call and see the dolls for the M. E. Christmas doll fair at the Shull & Askew room.

Tim McDowell has moved into the J. C. Henry house on South Jackson street.

Mrs. H. S. McIntosh spent Sunday with her father, J. D. Connolly, at Pleasant Lake.

A sewing machine would make a nice Christmas present. You can buy one cheap at Kiblinger's 50-51

Eugene Hoffman, son of Geo. R. Hoffman, of Walla Walla, Wash., is in this section visiting old friends.

The death of Thomas Cochran, whose notice appears elsewhere, removes one of the best known of our citizens.

There will be a Christmas entertainment at the Presbyterian church. Music, speaking, etc. Don't forget it.

Dr. Johnston, dentist, has the new method of filling teeth without pain, as well as painless extraction of teeth.

Too much matter for our space this week, and several valuable articles that will be looked for this week will appear next.

E. P. Sherwood and wife were in town Monday. They are interested in the chances of buying a permanent home.

S. M. High was here Monday, to get excused from serving on the grand jury as he is teaching school. The judge let him off.

E. D. Beadle is repairing and improving his recently purchased residence on North Main street. It is the Girardot property and will make him a cozy home.

F. J. Yesbera invites everybody to visit his jewelry store before making their purchases for Christmas. He has lots of nice new goods suitable for presents.

Rev. Charles Oswald, of McCormick Theological Seminary at Chicago, will preach at the Presbyterian church next Sunday morning and evening. All are invited.

MARRIED—Dec. 18, 1893, at the residence of the bride's parents in Auburn, Miss Effie Bumpus to Mr. Edward Hornbed, of Paxton, Illinois, by Jacob Walborn, Esq.

Our choice selections of silverware and jewelry are now ready for the inspection and approval of all who know a good thing when they see it. D. A. Hodge, the leading jeweler.

LOST:—In Auburn on Friday, Dec. 1, a lady's gold watch and chain. Mainspring of watch is broken. The party finding same will please leave at this office and receive reward. 49-51

Mrs. Gen. L. J. Blair died at her home in Waterloo Tuesday, after several years of sickness and suffering. We expect a more extended notice next week. Funeral is at 10 a. m. to-morrow.

The last sad rites were had over what remained of George Frederick last Thursday at 2 p. m., the funeral being by Rev. J. D. Brosy at the Lutheran church. The interment was in Woodlawn.

Surveyor VanAuken's wife died Monday, and yesterday her remains were taken to Pleasant Lake for the funeral and interment. She has suffered long of a cancerous disease. An obituary appears next week.

W. L. Meese sold a Swing Washer to Melvin Springer, east of town, for a Christmas present to his wife. Now that is a good idea. What gift could be more appropriate or more thankfully received? Go thou, and do likewise.

ALBUMS
Cheap. Just the thing to keep those extra photos from getting soiled and lost. Think of it! A sixty cabinet album for 50 cents.
DAVENPORT, THE DRUGGIST.

We last week received a paper from Danville, Ill., by the kindness of D. D. Snyder, containing an account of the hanging of the two young men at that place for the murder of a man. They had read Jesse James novels and wanted to do likewise.

Thoughtless persons, or worse, are carrying off articles, tools, etc., from the ruins of the Church Furniture Factory. Many of these could be repaired, and they mostly belong to workmen. The least these parties can do is to return them, as the act is about the size of theft.

The Rileys are at Garrett next week beginning Monday evening, for a four nights' run at Wagner's Opera House. This excellent company is very popular everywhere. It will interest our people to know that Miss Agatha Singleton, who was Graham Earle's leading actress is with them.

W. H. McIntosh, Sam Hanna, Auditor Coffinbery, Treasurer Sawvel, Commissioners Lockwook, Hoffelder and Henderson, W. L. Penfield, Judge McClellan, J. W Baxter and many other Auburn citizens have been spending more or less time at Angola lately, as witness or attorneys, or plaintiffs and defendants in the case of the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works against DeKalb county.

The Dispatch of last week is quite tickled at the good words it got in the COURIER's historical articles—the articles to which it so sneeringly referred not long ago as "ancient history." But thousands of people appreciate the efforts the COURIER has been making to resurrect from oblivion at least a portion of the facts, incidents and conditions of DeKalb county. Yet we believe the Dispatch never gave us a good word in the matter till it found something that appeared favorable to itself. But, "thus wags the world."

Editor Miner, of the Garrett Republican, was in town on business Monday. That reminds us that he is giving Garrett a local paper. There is column after column of Garrett news, and we can see from that, that there is such a place as Garrett, a real town. The Clipper, after getting in several columns of abuse of Auburn, and the regular amount of rapes and seductions, was so full it never could mention Garrett, and but for an occasional trip over there, or the sight of a Garrett man on our streets, we should have forgotten there was such a place. But we believe Garrett is a live town enough to fill a good local paper with good local matter. And a good local paper, we believe, will be appreciated over there and supported.

The sheriff added a member to his numerous family at the jail Saturday. Wm. Plank, of Garrett, was arrested on charge of stealing a watch. He is said to be a sort of hotel thief.

Cal Husselman reached home last week after several days spent in lecturing at county farmers' institutes in the south part of the state including Brown, Jennings and Ripley counties.

We were pleased to make the acquaintance Saturday, of Thomas Kirst, of Concord, an enterprising farmer of that section. His wife was here also to get some work done by our dentists.

LOST: Somewhere on Main street, Auburn, Dec 19, a red leather pocket bill book, containing money, draft and other papers. Finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving at this office or with D. Z. Hoffman.

Next Saturday the C. L. S. C. meets with Mrs. J Zent at 2 p. m. Program: Rome and the Making of Modern Europe, Mrs. Nickey; Outlines of Economics—Mrs. McClellan; What is Geology? Mrs. Zent; music by Mrs. McClellan.

Wm. Frederick, of Clyde, Ohio, was here last Thursday to attend the funeral of his brother, the late George Frederick, who lost his life in the Church Furniture fire. Of course, all the relatives feel greatly the terrible fate of Mr. Frederick.

The S. H. G meets with Mrs. Moss. Music, Mrs. Moss; Quotations on birth of Christ, roll call; Chap. 8, American Conn., Mrs. Clifton; History, Mrs. McKay; Synopsis of Irving's Christmas Tale, Mrs. Caruth; Christmas Story, Mrs. Salyer.

THE LOST CHORD.
This is not the load of wood brought us last week on subscription, but an elegantly illustrated gift book, shown with many others by
DAVENPORT, THE DRUGGIST.

The verdict of the coroner in the case of Mr. Frederick's death as rendered last week, throws no new light on the matter. After taking all the testimony that could be had, the terrible fate of Frederick is left in the same uncertainty indicated in the very full account of the fire given in last week's COURIER. The verdict can only say, "The factory caught fire from some unknown cause and said George Frederick failed to make his escape from said burning factory from some unknown cause." This is all we are likely to know.

The reporter at this place for the Fort Wayne Journal must be a daisy, or else the people at the Journal office can't read very well. The reports are generally wild and the one about the burning of the Church Furniture Factory is no exception. All the papers in this section that get their news from the Journal have fallen into the same error, and it gets to be almost funny to pick up one paper after another and learn that "W. H. McIntosh's residence was destroyed." Up here we prefer to believe it was the residence of W. H. McQuiston, a few feet from the factory, rather than that of W. H. McIntosh several blocks away.

Christmas Entertainment.

The M. E. Sunday School will give an entertainment on Christmas night, at which among many other attractions, they will have a Ferris wheel on which will be hung the Christmas gifts, etc. This will be a novelty. There will be no admittance charged, but an important feature of the meeting will be voluntary "Christmas giving" for the benefit of the poor. All kinds of useful gifts will be received for this purpose so that those who cannot give money may be able to do good by giving other articles.

Christmas at Corunna.

The Character of the Christmas entertainment to be given by the Christian Sunday school in Corunna on Christmas night, will be a fine cantata entitled "Santa Claus' Delight." The three grumblers who think the church and Sunday school ought not to be disgraced by Santa Claus coming to bring presents to the children received a rebuke by each receiving a present. Also a striking lesson in regard to remembering the poor girl, the little bootblack and news boy. Everybody is welcome to put presents on the tree for friends. Presents received Monday afternoon. No admittance charged. A collection taken at the close to help defray expenses. All are invited.

The C. E. Bazar.

In spite of the terrible rain that fell all day Friday and that evening, and the scarcely less inclement weather of Saturday, the young people at the Presbyterian church were well patronized as they richly deserved to be. The room was decorated tastefully and at considerable trouble. The goods shown were fine, some articles having more fine needle work than could be done for the entire price asked for it. Nearly all were sold by the time of closing and the few remaining articles were put on sale again Monday afternoon, though the weather was nearly as bad as Saturday. The total receipts will be nearly $90, and from this will come only about $10 expense. The C. E. are to be congratulated.

Incorporators and directors of the Marion Co. are R. B. Turnbull, C. D. Crumb, J. J. Pitts, of Cleveland, Ohio; W. B. Gamble, D. R. Bunn and John Grether, of Akron, Ohio; M. E. Malone, of Columbus, Ohio; and Samuel S. Putt, of Auburn, Indiana. We are not acquainted with any of the gentlemen named, except S. S. Putt, of this place. But looking back to the splendid success he has made in the management of the Keeley institute in this place, we feel like saying that the incorporators of the Marion Institute have been very fortunate to secure his active co-operation. We cannot too highly commend his management of the Auburn Institute. It has been a perfect success from the first day.

Auburn's Factories.

Our factories are taking on new life. The great Kiblinger establishment is fairly bursting with new material ready to be worked into buggies. He starts up soon with a full force, and expects the most prosperous year he has had.

The Zimmerman factory expects to begin with a full force after the holidays. They have been running with about half their force during the summer and fall. The body factory has kept a few men at work all the time. The Auburn Foundry and Machine Works is also getting ready for increased business.

Efforts have been made to assist the Church Furniture Company to start again, but the prospect is not good and we may lose this desirable plant.

THE report that oysters are scarce is stew thin.

A MAN must be indeed deaf if he can't hear his own jokes when he perpetrates them.

NOW THAT all the trainmen have been supplied with rifles, shooting tournaments, in which they can learn to use them, will be in order.

DR. EDWARD EVERETT HALE has been represented in print as collecting children's sayings for some philosophical purpose, as a result of which his mail is inundated with letters from appreciative parents and others containing anecdotes of this sort, but Dr. Hale denies that he is making any such collection for the purpose named or any other.

PRINCE KRAPOTKIN, the celebrated Russian exile and advocate of anarchy, who makes his headquarters in London, looks the anarchist every inch of him. He is tall and lathy, with deep-set eyes, bald head, and patriarchal whiskers and mustache, which grow in a gray, unkempt mass over his breast. His principal gesture when speaking consists in spreading the fingers of both hands wide apart and see-sawing the air with his arms.

MISERABLE Italy suffers another financial and political shock in the failure of the Credit Mobilier of Rome, which will pull down many of the feeble surviving banks of the country. The royal government has been playing the desperate game of carrying a lot of tottering brokers and money-lenders through its own risky political tactics, and this is but another added to a long series of disasters made inevitable by the senseless jingoism of Crispi. To be a member of the triple alliance was pretty on paper, but it has brought Italy and the house of Savoy perilously near revolution.

THE Toronto Empire calmly remarks that the Canadian forests "furnish the only timber supply upon this continent worth speaking about." It is evident either that the Toronto editor has not traveled extensively outside of Canada or that he is not particular about his statements. There is a good deal of timber left in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan and Maine, and there is much more in the Southern States, from which lumber is exported in large quantities, and there is still more in the northwestern portion of the United States and California, not to speak of Alaska, where trees grow much as they do in British Columbia.

GIRLS in all English-speaking countries will be in a flutter when they learn that the big wigs of the English courts have expressed the conviction that the law permitting actions for breach of promises should be repealed. In the opinion of the mighty Dogberrys over the sea, this sacred privilege of the sex must be taken from it because designing females are constantly preying upon the fortunes of young and also of old peers. What a dreadful thing! Rather than sanction such a calamity, the learned judges would prefer that the aristocracy should prey upon the affections of the British spinsters of all classes without any fear of damages for broken vows. But Parliament will doubtless protect the girls.

THE quarrel the Comstockians and amusement purveyors are having in New York over a painted gorilla recalls some of the stories Columbian guards tell freely now about the lagoon at Jackson Park. There is no doubt that many people who speak only English did not quite understand what the much talked of lagoon was. One lady asked a guard in the Agriculture Building to show her to the part where the lagoon was fed. Another asked a guard if the lagoon was kept in the Woman's Building. Another became confused between gondola and lagoon and worked off her confusion by calling an electric launch a galleon. All of which shows that the vernacular might just as well have been used anyway. A lake would have served equally well. It might have been less classic, but it would not have created so much disorder in natural history.

THE suspension of thirty students at the Winona, Minn., Normal School for parting their hair in the middle has caused no little comment in educational circles. As a normal school is an institution where people are taught to teach, it is to be presumed that the teachers in a normal school and the principal who reigns over them must represent the very essence of wisdom. Therefore, when such persons perform an unusual act they must have grave reasons for their deed. It must be done in the interest of pedagogy and general intellectual advancement. When the authorities of the Winona Normal set their feet down upon the practice of parting the hair in the middle it could not have been because it was merely a fashion that incurred their disapproval. Learned teachers of teachers surely can take no interest in a question of hair-dressing. They are looking out for what lies under the hair. The conclusion is inevitable that the Winona wise ones have discovered that parting the hair in the middle, when practiced by males, has an injurious effect upon the brain or is a surface indication of a brain that is not adapted to the intellectual work of instructing the young. An explanation from the Winona authorities is in order.

THE object of public school instruction is not alone intellectual culture, but also to render the future citizen self-supporting and well equipped to enter the battle of life. Acting on this proposition, the enemies of the high school erroneously, as we believe, condemn the curriculum as being of small practical value, seemingly forgetting that knowledge thus obtained is at the best little more than the stepping stone to the education that is to follow. The successful man is a student all his life; not necessarily a student of books, but of business, of human nature, of the world in general, and his chosen profession or his trade in particular. The early culture received in the high school is essential as teaching the boy, as a boy, to profitably study as a man. The high-school education teaches the youth to reason; it makes easy for him the more trying practical study of business. Anything that will develop the reasoning powers of the youth is a true educator and invaluable as such. For this reason, if for no other, the high school is a success.

THAT King Humbert should miss a chance to meet Chauncey Depew is another added to the King's numerous misfortunes. The King was engaged in the minor business of trying to fix up a cabinet and of extricating a score of banks from the debris of the Credit Mobilier when the suave New-Yorker called. The King found it impossible to see the caller at just that moment, but was sure he could if Chauncey should remain for a few days. Chauncey could not, and the King has no suspicion how much he has missed. At this time, too, in his experience, for if any man could lift up his spirits Chauncey could. Chauncey, on the other hand, realizing that the contretemps is the King's misfortune and not his fault, may retrace his steps to the Eternal City before returning to the United States. If the King were only shrewd enough to open a way to it, Chauncey could make in the name of the New York Central an offer for all Italy that the house of Savoy might find eligible.

THE official returns of the British Board of Trade, giving the statistics of railway accidents during the year 1892, may give the railroad managers of this country food for thought, and justify the question whether our own great lines of interstate communication are managed with a due regard to the safety of passengers and the necessities of traffic. A comparison between the numbers killed and injured in collisions, derailments and ordinary traffic running accidents, shows a fearful difference between the English returns and those of our own country. In Great Britain the figures show that for the year 1892 there were 29 passengers and 9 employes killed in such accidents as have been indicated; while in this country, for ten months only, 260 persons were killed and 841 injured. And even this was better than in 1891, when 790 persons were killed and 2,685 wounded. Nor will it do to assume that the railroads of Great Britain are such small and insignificant concerns, when judged by our own trunk line standard, as to make comparisons worthless and misleading. In the United Kingdom the railroads are big enough to give employment to about 400,000 men, and they handle about 900,000,000 passengers during the year. A network of lines which can show figures of this sort is not too small to be used as a test compared with our own roads, particularly when we find that in this country one person was killed for every 306 employed and one injured for every 33 employed. It is neither creditable to American companies nor fair to their passengers that they should be so far in the rear in the means of assuring safety of travel. This country is too intelligent and progressive and its mechanical and engineering skill of too high a standard to permit its vast railroads to remain as elements of danger instead of being means of perfect safety in travel; and the public will demand and managers be compelled to provide such appliances of equipment and conditions of roadbed as will bring all the railways of the country to that level which has been developed in the great lines of Pennsylvania, in the New York Central and on one or two other roads which are as safe as the best British lines and far surpass them in their comforts and conveniences.

Study of the Hand.

An interesting discussion has sprung up among the palmists in regard to the line of the hand known as the marriage line. One recognized authority says that when this line curves upward the possessor is not likely to marry at all. Other experts reply that they know many married and happy people with such a line. It is also alleged that the transverse line on the "hill of Mercury,"—which one party says is the marriage line, is not so considered by the Chirological Society. "Our opinion," says the editor of the party organ, "is that these lines are signs of attachment, and their is scarcely a hand ever seen without at least one in the hand of either married or unmarried people."

AT WAR WITH HERSELF.

The Story of a Woman's Atonement, by Charlotte M. Braeme.

CHAPTER XXII—Continued.

"I quite expect you will be shocked at me," said Lady Charnleigh; "but if I am anything at all upon the stage I will be a queen—nothing less. I would like very much to wear a queen's crown and hear myself called 'your majesty,' were it only in fun, as the children say. I will be Marie Stuart, Queen of Scotland, and the tableau shall be a room at Holyrood, with the Queen seated, listening to Rizzio."

"May I be Rizzio?" asked Sir Bertram.

"No," she replied, the beautiful face growing grave in a moment—"he was killed."

"Then you do not care whether I am killed or not?" interposed le beau sabreur.

"I did not say so, Captain Flemyng," replied the fair coquette. "You shall be Rizzio; you shall sit and look at me as though I were indeed your queen. Now we have four good tableaux." To herself she said, "It is more tiresome to have two lovers than none. How shall I manage to keep peace between them much longer? A scene from 'The Rival Lovers' would fit them exactly."

"Let us copy the 'Black Brunswicker,'" she resumed, aloud; "that will make the most beautiful picture of all, Captain Flemyng. You could be the hero, and Ethel your love; you will do that excellently. Ethel, you remember the attitude of the girl in the picture. She clings to her lover with sudden fear, half-despairing fondness, and yet, it seems to me, with somewhat of pride that he so promptly obeys the call to arms. You can look all that."

"I could look proud of the bravery of any one I loved," confessed Miss Dacre.

"We might have a scene from 'Faust and Marguerite,'" put in Sir Bertram.

"Yes, the one from the 'Bride of Lammermoor,'" added Lady Charnleigh, "and that, I think, will be sufficient. Shall we ask Beatrice Thornton to join us? She is a magnificent brunette, and will make a variety; we can find some good scenes for her. Sir Bertram, she must accompany you; you will make an excellent contrast; she is dark, with eyes 'as black as midnight,' and hair like a dusky cloud."

Sir Bertram looked up uneasily.

"Do you like such contrasts?" he asked. "I thought harmony was preferable."

"No—a dark-haired lady should marry a fair-haired Saxon," she replied, mischievously.

Captain Flemyng's face brightened, while Sir Bertram looked considerably depressed. Ethel Dacre admired the perfect balance she kept between them; the most consummate coquette could not have done better.

"What a glorious evening we shall have!" said Lady Charnleigh. "I shall hardly have patience to wait until the times comes. What a beautiful world it is! How fair life is and how happy we are!"

So she thought looking round her, all unconscious that the heart of the beautiful, gentle girl beside her was almost broken with the smart of her hopeless love, and that Captain Flemyng was half mad with jealousy—Sir Bertram happy and without care.

A coolness came between the two who had been such close friends; they said nothing, but the intimate friendship, the near and dear companionship was at an end. A woman's fair face had come between them; they both loved the young Countess, and were each conscious of the other's love.

She was not one to be loved lightly; there was that indescribable charm about her that lured a man's heart from him and gave him no peace. Those who loved her did so with no mean affection; the fair land of England did not hold two nobler men than Sir Bertram Gordon and Captain Flemyng; they were of different types, different characters, but each in his own way somewhat approached perfection; even their faults sprung from virtues. Paul Flemyng was proud, but his pride sprung more from an innate nobility of soul which was intolerant of anything mean than from over-appreciation of himself. Sir Bertram was jealous, but his jealousy sprang rather from his intense love than from weak suspicion.

He struggled hard with himself. Paul loved her—he felt sure of that—and Paul had already lost that magnificent inheritance of Crown Leighton; was he also to lose his love?

Then he thought that such a fancy was overstrained and morbid, that Lady Charnleigh was free to be won, and that they were free to win her; let the one who loved best win. He resolved to take the first opportunity of telling her of his love, and asking her her to be his wife.

"I wish she were poor," he thought, "that I might prove my love by placing what little I possess at her feet, or that I were a king, that I might ask her to share my throne. I wish she were not a countess and a great heiress; yet she will know I love her for her own sake, and not for what she has."

After the dinner-party, when Lady Charnleigh had decided what was to be attempted in the way of a grand entertainment, the two gentlemen seldom allowed a day to pass without riding over to Crown Leighton—they had always some proper and legitimate excuse. At one time it was about rehearsals for the charades, or a question about the ball, at another a question concerning invitations. Sir Bertram, having no military duties, had an advantage over his friend; he could ride over in the morning, and Lady Fanshawe always invited him to stay to luncheon; and then he lingered until it was impossible to get back to Weildon in time for dinner. Lady Fanshawe began to see that there was more of design than of accident in this.

"I used to fancy it would be Captain Flemyng," she said to herself; "but I have a suspicion that Leonie will be Lady Gordon after all."

The young countess herself began to have a kind of conviction that Sir Bertram Gordon would never feel happy away from Crown Leighton. Perhaps it was the welcome certainty that made her treat him with such coy, sweet reserve. He could never find her alone—Miss Dacre or Lady Fanshawe was always with her. He exhausted his ingenuity in finding excuses to take her from them, but she invariably defeated his purpose. Perhaps she wished to enjoy to its full extent that which is the happiest time in a woman's life—when she knows that she is loved, but no word of that love has been spoken.

CHAPTER XXIII.

There was great excitement in the county when the invitations for Lady Charnleigh's ball were sent out. "That was just as it should be," people said. "Crown Leighton had always been the center of hospitality; old times were being renewed." Tradespeople in the quiet little town of Weildon wore more cheerful faces; it made all the difference in the world to them whether Crown Leighton was tenanted or not. Rumor told of the wonderful preparations that were being made. In the western wing, among the state-rooms, was a large and magnificent ball-room. By Lady Charnleigh's orders a large conservatory had been added to it, and now she desired that one of the state saloons adjoining should be transformed into a theater.

"I like theatricals," she said, when Lady Fanshawe made some slight remonstrances. "I may just as well have a theater now as in a year's time. I shall often have charade parties, and I intend the stage to be a perfect little bijou. I may just as well amuse myself in this way as in others, auntie."

Lady Fanshawe yielded, knowing how true her words were.

"That life cannot be a very worthy one, Leonie, whose only business is amusement."

"There will be time enough for graver thoughts when I grow older," said the girl. "Let me enjoy my youth."

Sir Bertram took great interest in the erection of the theater; he was able to suggest many improvements which would never have occurred to one so inexperienced as Lady Charnleigh. She watched the progress of the alterations with great attention.

"What happy hours we shall spend here!" she said to Miss Dacre, one morning. "I do not think any country house without a theater can be called complete."

Miss Dacre made some polite reply, and then looked up in surprise, for Lady Charnleigh's clear, soft, musical laugh rang through the room.

"I was just thinking, Ethel, that I spoke as though I had been a countess all my life. I never saw a country house until a year ago."

Contrast between the past and present often amused her for a few minutes, and then her heart would give a great bound of satisfaction at remembering how brilliant and beautiful the present was.

"Here is Sir Bertram," said Ethel, one morning, as she stood at the window of the breakfast-room. "I should fancy his horse knows the way to Crown Leighton."

They had just risen from the breakfast table; a most significant smile crossed Lady Fanshaw's face, while Lady Charnleigh turned away lest her vivid blushes should be seen. Ethel went after her.

"Leonie, here is Sir Bertram."

"He is very welcome," said the young heiress, with serene composure.

"So I imagine," rejoined Ethel, with a smile.

Lady Charnleigh was obliged to look up when he entered the room, and on her lover's face the girl read a look of determination; she knew at once that her trifling was at an end, that she could put him off no longer, that he had come that day expressly to be heard, and that she must hear him. She read all this in a hundred different ways. The proud head was thrown back with more kingly grace and dignity, the frank, handsome face was determined, the eyes were grave and calm. Leonie, Lady Charnleigh, would trifle with her lover no more.

She watched him as he crossed the room to speak to Lady Fanshawe. How handsome he looked—a grand Saxon king, so proud, so frank, so different from everyone else—and he loved her! Her heart beat when he came to her and said:

"Lady Charnleigh, I have come over to see you to-day for a very special reason; you will find five minutes for me, I hope?"

"Certainly," she replied, and she proceeded at once to make such arrangements as would keep Ethel near her. The light of her happiness dazzled her—the moment she had longed for, yet dreaded, had come, and she would fain have delayed it; her emotion frightened her—she was glad with a happiness that almost terrified her.

First of all she asked him to go with Miss Dacre to see how the theater was progressing; gravely and courteously he obeyed her, but his eyes, as they lingered on her, said: "Do not think to escape me—you must hear what I have to say."

Then she was invisible until the bell rang for luncheon, when she entered the dining-room with a serene, smiling face, as though she had never thought of such a thing as driving a lover to distraction.

After luncheon visitors came, and, though she might have dismissed them, she lingered talking to them and showing her new conservatories, until Sir Bertram almost lost patience. The bell rang for dinner, and yet he had said no word to her. As he went through the hall he said:

"Lady Charnleigh, pray remember that you have given me your promise for a five minutes' interview; do not forget."

She had not forgotten; she had simply not dared to look at the gleam of sunlight that had fallen at her feet. Her eyes drooped, a lovely blush overspread her face, her lip quivered slightly.

"I will try to remember," she said.

So he waited patiently through the long hour of dinner. In all his after life he never forgot how lovely she then looked. She never met his glance when he spoke to her—a color like the blush of a damask rose flushed her face; she never voluntarily addressed him, yet he felt no fear. He had once admired a dress of pale blue silk profusely trimmed with rich white lace, and she wore it this evening. He had admired her most when the rich golden-brown hair lay in shining abundance on her graceful shoulders, and this evening it was dressed in the fashion he admired. She wore also a suite of magnificent pearls, worth a king's ransom. The shy, half-timid manner was something new, and it enhanced her beauty as the presence of moss improves the beauty of the rose.

Dinner was over at length, and Sir Bertram quickly followed the ladies into the drawing-room; the young Countess' heart gave a great bound, the golden light grew more dazzling. She must look at it soon.

The evening was more than beautiful. The sunbeams were warm and bright, the western wind was filled with the fragrant breath of a thousand flowers, while magnolias yielded their rare odor, and the queenly roses, and the tall, stately lilies gleamed in the sunlight; the birds were singing, and the water from the fountains fell with musical ripple more beautiful than any other earthly sound.

Lady Charnleigh had gone to the piano, Sir Bertram followed her.

"Lady Charleigh," he said, "do not the fragrance and beauty outside tempt you? Will you come and hear what the birds are singing about?"

He fancied he had left no loop-hole of escape; but she said:

"Yes, with pleasure; the grounds are much more pleasant than these warm rooms. Ethel, will you join us?"

And Miss Dacre, all unconscious of Sir Bertram's plans, stood up; but he was determined—Lady Charnleigh had trifled with him for the last time. He went up to Miss Dacre, his frank face graver than she had ever seen it.

"Dear Miss Dacre," he said, in a low voice, "will you kindly decline Lady Charnleigh's invitation? I want to speak to her alone."

Ethel laughed.

"Most certainly I will, Sir Bertram. Lady Charnleigh," she added, "I will finish my book, I think, and join you in the grounds afterward."

The Countess of Charnleigh and Sir Bertram Gordon went through the long window that opened on to the lawn. The fair earth seemed to be flushed with color and beauty. Close to them was a rosery, where roses of every kind were in full bloom; behind them the pale lilies stood in great sheaves, and magnolias raised their stately heads, and a grove of flowering limes led to the woods.

The sun shone and the birds sang, but never a word did she utter. He walked in silence by her side until they had reached a secluded spot, and then he said:

"How cruel you have been to me, Lady Charnleigh! How you have tortured me! You must have known how long I have been waiting to say a few words to you."

"I am not fond of either cruelty or of torture," returned the fair countess, evasively.

"Indeed, you must be. You must have read my heart's desire on my face; you must know that I love you so dearly that my love is eating my very life away—yet you would not give me a chance to tell you; you have tortured me, Lady Charnleigh, and you know it; now you must be additionally kind to atone for it. Leonie, I want to tell you something." He took her hand in his, and she made no attempt to elude that firm grasp. "Come here," he said, and he led her to a mossy bank. "Oh, Leonie, when a man's heart is quite full, it is very hard to find words."

She sat down, wondering whether the world held other joy so great as hers; wondering whether other lives had been so supremely blessed. Sir Bertram half sat, half knelt at her feet.

"Leonie, I want to tell that I love you; that I have loved you from the first moment I saw you. I want to tell you that my life is in your hands; that I love you with an affection so mighty in its strength, so powerful, that my whole life is merged in it. I am bold to tell you so, sweet. I know that far better men than I have knelt at your feet to ask for the priceless gift of your love, but no one can love you as I do, Leonie. Will you trust your life to me, my queen? I will make it as happy as a summer dream."

She listened to him, her heart beating fast, every pulse swelling with strange, new-born gladness, but she made no reply.

OCCUPATION AND AGE.

Some Interesting Figures of the Connection Between the Two.

During the past thirty-four years and eight months there died in Massachusetts 161,801 men over 20 years of age, whose occupations were specified in the registry of their decease. Farmers attained the highest age, 65¼ years, and made up one-fifth of the total number. The class next to the farmers in the average of life is that class called "active mechanics abroad," such as brickmakers, carpenters, masons, tanners, millwrights, riggers, calkers, slaters, and stonecutters, but the average age of 12,000 of them who died in Massachusetts during the period mentioned was only about 52½ years, a little over a year more than the average of all classes together.

Next to the active mechanics come the professional men, whose average age of death was over 51. Of this class the longest-lived were the judges and justices. They lived on the average 64 years, and led all the trades and professions except the farmers.

In some countries clergymen are longest-lived, but in Massachusetts the average age of the 1,100 of them who died during thirty-four years was only a little above 59. Of the professional men, those set down as students died at the earliest age, the average being only about 23, then came the professors, well over 57 years; then the lawyers, 56 years; then the physicians, over 55 years; public officers, 55. Sheriffs, constables, and policemen died at the average age of 53, while editors and reporters were gathered into the tomb before they completed their 47th year. The lives of comedians were also short, hardly reaching 39 years on the average, and dentists were cut down at the average age of 42. The artists also died early, their average age being 44 years. The musicians lived only to 42, and the teachers died at about the same age.

The shortest-lived were the telegraphers, who died at the average age of 28. Clerks and bookkeepers also died early, at the age of 36. Railroad agents and conductors departed this life on the average at about forty years, and druggists and apothecaries at 42, while saloon and restaurant keepers were put to final rest at 41. Next in order came the active mechanics in shops and the laborers of no special trades, the average of both being a little short of 48. Of the first class the longest-lived were the coopers, their average age at death being about 59 years. Next to them came the distillers, 58 years.

Poisoned Through a Letter.

Veratrine is a vegetable powder, nearly white, very acrid and poisonous, which is obtained from a genus of plants called veratrum sabadilla. It is a subtle and dangerous poison, the odor of which mounts to the brain and is very liable to produce death or insanity. One day in 1870 Prince Bismarck received a letter marked "private." It was opened by his confidential secretary, who had read but a few lines when he fell into a swoon. Another clerk who tried to read the letter was seized by the same symptoms. A physician saved their lives, but only after a hard struggle. It was afterward ascertained that the letter had been poisoned with veratrine, evidently intended for the famous German Chancellor.

New York City's Wealth.

The wealth of New York City, as a corporation, amounts to the enormous sum of $559,000,000. It is thus distributed: Central Park, $200,000,000; fifty other parks, $50,000,000; Croton aqueduct, $200,000,000; public markets, $20,000,000; city lots not in public use, $8,000,000; docks and piers, $30,000,000; police stations and land, $5,000,000; schools, $15,000,000; fire department, $5,000,000; courts, prisons, and islands, $20,000,000; water lots, $3,000,000; armories, $3,000,000.

Since 1871 the city's property has more than doubled in valuation, being then $277,000,000.

Princess Maud.

No one among the younger members of the English royal family takes a greater delight in assuming an alias than Princess Maud of Wales, who, when she has finished her stay in Scotland, is hoping to pay her annual visit to her late governess, now married and living in Devonshire. When she goes there she insists upon being called "Miss Mills," and upon being treated as a member of the family. She will have no ceremony of any kind.

Queer Freak of a Nail.

T. T. Bell, of Independence, Mo., while chopping down a large walnut tree a few days ago, found a tenpenny nail ten inches beneath the surface. Mr. Bell says he remembers driving it there while fixing a swing at the beginning of the war—thirty years ago.

DISPENSE WITH TARIFF-FOSTERED FACTORIES.

Industries that Feed Entirely on Protection Pap Are Expensive to the Country—Some Information Furnished by a Wool-Grower.

Changing Loss to Profit.

From the manufacturing centers of the East a few croaks and threats are arising. Fortunately there are such papers as the Boston Globe and Herald, the Philadelphia Times and Record and the Providence Journal to keep an eye on subsidized machine owners and report on falsehoods. In the political columns of Republican newspapers we get information that manufacturers are reducing wages much against their philanthropic desire, but to meet the Wilson bill reductions. In the trade columns we learn that the great glass works of West Virginia and Eastern Pennsylvania are taking orders and resuming work. We read Carnegie's boast that he can turn out with 2,000 men as much steel of better grade than he could with 10,000 when the tariff of 1883 was passed. We are told by the deepwater steel and iron manufacturers that they will do more business with free ores and low rates on finished goods than with taxed ores and high rates on finished goods. Even at the worst it therefore appears that the manufacturers themselves, as a class, will gain more than they will lose from the revision proposed by the Ways and Means Committee.

We might admit that some manufacturers will be unfavorably affected for a time. We might go further and admit that some may not be able to continue. In every business improvement the useless must go. It is stupid to stop an improvement that will benefit a thousand men because one man may be thereby asked to look for other work. The nation may be regarded as a huge business institution. It finds that it is running under a bad system. Useless expenses are eating into profits. Sales are being cut down by rules which displease customers. Men are employed whose work is not only worthless, but sadly in the way of good work on the part of the useful men. A reorganization is decided upon. It is known that the plan is good, that the general profits will be immensely increased, the volume of business enlarged and the expenses reduced. But the few useless men set up a howl. They do not want a change. They object to learning a new system. They declare their woes and not only plead but arrogantly demand that nothing shall be done. What does a business house do in such a case? It effects the reorganization. The useless men are taught the necessity of learning the new methods. In the end better wages are paid all around. Goods are handled at less expense. The house, the customers and the employes are all the gainers. The world is better for the change. Unprofitable business systems are immoral, because they lower the scale of comforts in every family touched by their operations. A reorganization into profitable and active systems is the best religion and morals for them. The tariff is essentially a business question. It is a moral question in its injustice. But all badly handled business is immoral and the tariff's immorality is a commercial immorality in its effects, though a political immorality because the powers of the Government are employed to prevent an improvement. The threats and croaks of the monopolist are in no way different from the reproaches and howls of the unprofitable employes of a business house that is reforming its abuses and departing from its venerable blunders. If they were all telling the truth they would not be worthy of attention. Most of them are telling falsehoods. A protective tariff is the most expensive business blunder a nation ever made. Wars and conquests do not cost as much. Give us the business reform and let us all get down to straight business that will pay everybody.—St. Louis Republic.

Too Easy on the Trusts.

The Wilson bill is excellent so far as it goes. It makes raw materials free. This will reduce prices of manufactured goods, enlarge the demand for them and compel the manufacturers to employ more labor at higher wages. It reduces duties and will lessen the cost of living without lowering wages. It will be a boon to manufacturers and laborers and a God-send to consumers. But in one respect, at least, the bill will not do all it should do. It will take much from trusts, but it will still leave them good pickings.

Take, for example, the steel rail trust. Duties on steel rails have been reduced from $13.44 per ton to 25 per cent.—about $5 per ton. But why leave any duty at all? It will yield no revenue except to the trust. There is not a shadow of a doubt but that steel rails can be, and are manufactured in some of our largest mills for less than $20, and probably for less than $19 per ton. These are figures that could not be touched by foreign manufacturers—at least in our own markets. Indeed, it is probable that if our manufacturers were not favored by duties they would soon be exporting more rails than are exported by any foreign country. About the time the new tariff schedule was under consideration by the Ways and Means Committee, the steel rail trust let go its grip, and prices fell from $29, where they had been for several years, to less than $22. After the 25 per cent. rate had been agreed upon, the trust took a new hold and fixed prices at $25—just below the point at which it would cease to be profitable to import. The duty will enable the manufacturers to charge about $5 more than they otherwise could do on every ton of steel rails sold in this country. It is worth tens of millions of dollars to the trust, but nothing whatever to the government. It will take millions out of the pockets of both the producers and consumers of grains, meats, etc., shipped over railroads, and return nothing to their pockets.

The one-fourth cent per pound duty left on refined sugar has no foundation in justice. It will simply license one of the worst trusts on American soil to extract $10,000,000 per annum from consumers. In no other country is sugar refined as cheaply as in our great refineries. Our exports greatly exceed our imports. During the past year this trust, protected by a duty of one-half cent per pound, has paid dividends of about $20,000,000 on an actual capital of less than $50,000,000, and besides has laid by a surplus of between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000.

The saw, ax, cartridge and dozens of other trusts can still ply their nefarious business after the Wilson bill is in operation. They all export their products and give special discounts to foreigners. They need no duty whatever, and it will be an act of shame to leave them even one per cent. Wilson has clipped the wings of these vultures; he should cut off their heads. Why has he not done so? Is the fear of intrenched corporate capital so great that even a party which represents the wishes of nearly two-thirds of the American people dare not lift its arm to strike the death blow to monopoly? If so, it will be in order for another congressman to arise and inquire, "Where are we at?"—Byron W. Holt.

Waked Up the Wrong Passenger.

A wool-grower in Wyoming having received a circular from the firm of Justice, Bateman & Co., wool commission merchants of Philadelphia, asking him to send to the Hon. Julius Cæsar Burrows, M. C., the answers to certain leading questions touching the wool tariff, the person thus interrogated sends a copy of his answer to the World. It must be very intesting to Burrows as well as to Justice, Bateman & Co. Being asked what price he got for his last clip of wool, he says that it netted him 9½ cents per pound, that the clip of 1892 netted him 14 cents, and that of 1891 brought him 17 cents. The crops of 1892 and 1893, he adds, were sold after the McKinley tariff went into force, while that of 1891 was sold before. The circular reminds the wool-grower that in Australia the sheep graze out all the year round, that the government fences the land, sinks the wells, and leases the land in large tracts for less money than our wool-growers pay taxes alone. To this the wool-grower replies:

> The sheep graze out here all the year the same as in Australia. The pasture is better here part of the time in summer than in winter, but if the sheep are properly handled they are fat all the year round. The government does not fence the land here, neither does any one else, so we have the whole country as an unobstructed range. We need no wells. We have the use of the range without owning it or leasing it or even paying taxes on it. The wool-grower that can't compete with any other wool-grower when he has all these advantages doesn't know enough to take advantage of a good thing when it is offered to him.

In reply to another question he says that the cost of wool-growing in Wyoming depends on the way the business is conducted. Some people lose money when they get 15 cents per pound for their wool and others make money when they get only 9 cents. As for himself, he says that the increase of his flocks is worth more than it costs to take care of them. Evidently Messrs. Justice, Bateman & Co. have "waked up the wrong passenger."—New York Evening Post.

The New Tariff Bill.

"Ultimate destruction" is what Mr. John D. Long, of Massachusetts, sees in the new tariff bill. He must be gifted with a very vivid imagination. —Providence Journal.

The new tariff bill, as proposed by the Democrats of the Ways and Means Committee, might properly be termed a bill for the emancipation of American industries.—Florida Times-Union.

It is by no means merely the bill of one man or even of one committee. It will rank among the most earnest, thoughtful and comprehensive plans ever formulated in the annals of tariff legislation.—Boston Globe.

The bill is admirable in theory and is a practical tax measure carefully worked out. It will need few amendments and only a short debate. Our Federal taxation is getting close to the Constitution.—St. Louis Republic.

The best feature of the Wilson tariff bill is its free list. There can be no possible doubt that those products which lie at the basis of great industries should be free of duty. To tax these is to tax production.—Indianapolis News.

It is to be expected that extreme McKinleyites will indulge in tales of woe over the Wilson bill, but they will not get much sympathy from the great mass of the manufacturers and the consumers of the country.—Buffalo Courier.

The Tax on Incomes.

England has an income tax and it is enforced without trouble. The English as a nation of people are certainly not more truthful than Americans.—Chattanooga News.

Thoughtful men in both parties admit that a tax on incomes is just and equitable. It is the best of all taxes, because it is paid by those who can easily afford to pay it.—Atlanta Constitution.

The income tax is not only just and right considered by itself. It is the keystone of a rational revenue system which shall impose crushing burdens upon no one, but will do equal and exact justice to all.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

An income tax is not imposed upon any one class of citizens any more than any other tax is. The tax on whisky is class legislation in the sense that people who do not drink whisky do not have to pay it; the tax on tobacco is the same.—Seattle Telegraph.

All the Republican papers are opposed to the income tax. They oppose it for the reason that an income tax strikes the rich and thus lowers the taxes of the poor, and the Republican theory is to always support the measures of the rich.—Mohawk Valley Democrat.

Tariff Bill Prospects.

There seems to be no room for doubt that the business men of the country, irrespective of party, are anxious to have the bill passed and put in operation as soon as may be consistent with proper deliberation and attention to harmony of detail. If the Republicans as politicians really think that the bill will be injurious to the country, they must think it will be injurious to the party responsible for it. Therefore they ought to be entirely willing to see it put in operation as soon as possible, so that its effects might be seen before the Congressional elections next November. Hence there is ground for the hope that they will make no factious opposition. There is even ground for the hope that they will not lend their aid to any faction of the majority which may attempt to emasculate the bill.—Chicago Herald.

Tax Figures.

The Republican Congressmen are said to oppose an income tax because they regard it as "the first step in the direction of free trade." It is the old story. The defenders of a tariff for bounties have repealed all of the direct taxes on wealth and most of the internal revenue taxes, and have at the same time largely increased the permanent appropriations, all with the same object of preventing a reduction of their monopoly-fostering tariff taxes on the necessaries of the people. It is for the Democrats to move in the opposite direction—untax necessaries, tax luxuries and superfluities.

Ad Valorem Duties.

The chief protectionist objection to an ad valorem tariff is that it is plain and easy to be understood. They prefer a form of duties as complicated as possible, and McKinley achieved a triumph in that line by making a very large number of duties both ad valorem and specific. No one but an expert could tell what such duties actually amounted to, and even an expert has to wait until after the duties are collected to calculate the rate.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

THE fat-friers threaten to retire Chairman Wilson from public life. It remains to be seen what the people of West Virginia think of this sort of impudence.

THE laborer who depends upon the tariff to raise or lower wages very naturally takes to the idea of having the foreigner pay his taxes.

GOOD kings are slaves and their people are free.—Marie Leczinska.

How He Reached Marshal Bazaine.

Donzella, chief lighthouse-keeper at Bonifacio, in Corsica, who has just died, was one of the heroes of the war of 1870. While Marshal Bazaine was shut up in Metz the Corsican swam down the Moselle with sealed instructions for him one night. Donzella had to run the gantlet of the German outposts, and, notwithstanding the darkness, he was pursued and frequently fired upon. He managed, however, to dodge the bullets by keeping his head as much as possible under water only coming to the surface every now and then, like a purpoise, to have a "blow." After having handed over the dispatches to Bazaine, he returned to his camp by the same dangerous river route. The Corsican, who was a native of Ajaccio, was one of the principal witnesses of the court-martial of Bazaine.—London Telegraph.

Corks as Fuel.

With every indication that coal is going up it is timely to suggest that a couple of girls in Paris used to keep themselves warm by burning orange peel and empty spools. Corks are also recommended. There is a story told of a well-known English curate who pocketed every cork he came across at a dinner table. When questioned as to this singular habit he blushed and said he gave them to the poor. A sufficient number of corks will keep a coalless man with a good fire all day. Fir cones are also advised and make a fine, charry blaze; likewise corncobs.

Where Wakefulness Has Its Birth.

Intelligent physicians are regarding with an eye less and less favorable the use of narcotics. While these are used in extreme cases to afford greatly needed temporary relief, professional efforts are far more generally directed, nowadays than formerly, to means of building up the nervous system as the basis of its healthful quietude. This is one reason why Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has received the sanction of physicians as a nervine tonic. Indigestion unrelieved is the fruitful father of insomnia, and the relief of the parent malady by the Bitters is usually followed by a return to tranquil sleep. Overwork, mental anxiety, sedentary habits impair digestion and weaken the nerves. The Bitters strengthens them by renewing the ability to digest and assimilate the food. Besides this, it healthfully stimulates the liver and kidneys. Biliousness, constipation, rheumatism and debility are remedied by this sterling medicine.

A Rattlesnake's Rattles.

The growth of the rattlesnake has been studied by Dr. Feokistow, who finds that the rattle is frequently shed; and, after being shed (his snakes were kept in a very warm room), in three or four months two rattles were present, their appearance have nothing to do with the casting of the skin. The snakes were made to register the vibrations of the rattle on smoked paper, and it was found that the vibration was a compound one, consisting of the vibration of the tail as a whole, and of the rattle independently of the tail vibrations. The approximate figures of vibrations were for the tail 75 of the rattle 110 a minute.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. Where Our Flag Was Made.

The famous house where the first American flag was made is yet standing in Arch street, Philadelphia. The structure is a tiny brick dwelling of colonial times. Apart from the historic associations which attach to the place in connection with the Stars and Stripes, the house is also interesting in being built in English brick brought over in 1682 of the Welcome, the same ship which carried William Penn. The structure has, therefore, been standing more than 210 years, being one of the most ancient in the country. It was already nearly a century old when Mrs. Betsy Ross in June, 1776, under the supervision of General Washington, fashioned the banner which a month later was flung to the breeze, and from a mere piece of bunting became the standard of a new nation, as the State House bell proclaimed liberty throughout the land.

Mrs. Ross was a seamstress and her connection with the flag was probably due to the fact that she did fine sewing for the leading Philadelphia families, and, being well known as an excellent needle-woman, she was selected to carry out the ideas of Washington and Robert Morris, who together called upon her, and watched the flag grow under her nimble fingers. Her descendants are yet living in Philadelphia.

If the old dwelling is torn down, which seems inevitable in the near future, as huge business blocks already surround it, the scramble for relics will be very great. There is, however, a movement on foot to buy the house by popular subscription, and thus insure the preservation of one of the most historically valuable of existing landmarks.

Don'ts for Boys.

Don't gamble.

Don't drink whisky.

Don't cultivate bad habits.

Don't ever be unkind to your mother.

Don't think it smart to disobey your father.

Don't talk when you should listen to older people.

Don't ever talk disrespectfully about girls or women.

Don't imitate a man who is not as good as you wish to be.

Don't use bad language before ladies and old men; don't use it at all.

Don't indulge in vulgar conversation.

Don't try to be too good. Be a boy; but be a manly boy.

Don't neglect your opportunities for securing an education.

Don't always be making good resolutions, and as often breaking them.

Don't go wild after some other boy's sister when you should go with your own.

Don't excuse yourself because you are better than the worst of boys you can think of.

Don't treat any girl in a way that you would not like your sister treated by other boys.—Ex.

Too Elaborate Toys.

It is said by a Frenchman that the indulgence of the American children in so many toys of mechanical perfection does less to stimulate the imagination than simple contrivances that leave something to the invention of the child. The doll that will talk and cry, the train of cars that has only to be wound up to make it go, the dancing bears and the good-sized houses that aim to be exact copies of those in which the little lad or lassie live—do they indeed make children "pretend" or imagine less than when the little girl must talk and cry for her doll, and the boy must not only be steam engine but a whole train of cars, or a tribe of Indians?

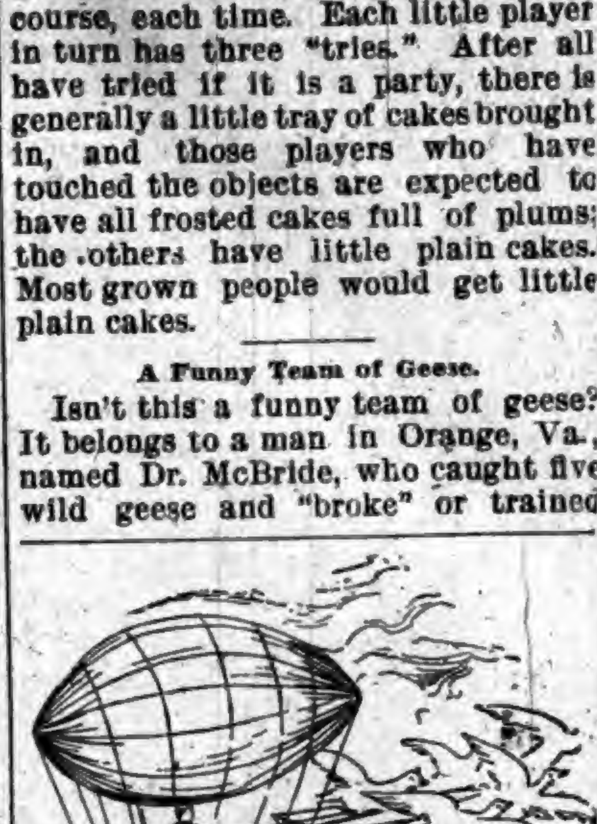
What Shall I "Touch?"

In this game the first player is placed in the center of the room and blind-folded. But before he is blindfolded he is told to look all about him and notice all the things in the room. After the handkerchief is tied over his eyes he is told to turn around once and then to say aloud what he expects to touch by walking straight forward with his hands outstretched. Of course, it is great fun to see him go and touch the table after he has said he expected to touch the rocking chair.

He may "look" and then be blindfolded again, he may try three times to touch objects, turning around, of course, each time. Each little player in turn has three "tries." After all have tried if it is a party, there is generally a little tray of cakes brought in, and those players who have touched the objects are expected to have all frosted cakes full of plums; the others have little plain cakes. Most grown people would get little plain cakes.

A Funny Team of Geese.

Isn't this a funny team of geese? It belongs to a man in Orange, Va., named Dr. McBride, who caught five wild geese and "broke" or trained them to drive in harness. He says they pull a little boat which he has built for himself through the water very rapidly, and that he is going to make a balloon like that shown in the picture. But perhaps that won't work.



TEAM OF GEESE.

Dr. McBride writes to a St. Louis paper:

"Last winter I made of light, well-seasoned wood a little frame with steel runners—a tricycle sleigh—and made a mile and a quarter per minute on the ice, riding in a circle. The feeling of going at that rate through the open air is something grand and wonderful. The wind whistling by your ears like a tornado, causing the tears to flow thick and fast, made it necessary for me to use a glass over my face to keep from freezing."

Robin Hood's Pennyworth.

Everybody has heard of Robin Hood, the famous outlaw of Richard the Lion-Heart's reign, who befriended the poor and relieved the rich of some of their ill-gotten wealth. In helping himself to the property of other folk, it is needless to say that he paid very little for it. He was therefore able to sell the stolen goods at a cheap rate, much below their proper value. Hence arose the proverb about "selling Robin Hood's pennyworth;" or, in other words, buying a great bargain. Probably neither the forester nor his merry men ever stayed to consider the right or wrong of the many transactions in which they took part.

Wanted Her Share.

A coming wedding in a Northern New York town is to be carried out with considerable pomp and ceremony, as befits the striking beauty of the bride to be. Her small sisters of 8 and 10 years of age are to be the bridesmaids, and the other evening were being drilled in their parts, when the baby of the family, Miss Dorothy, aged 3, slipped down from the seat where she had been soberly watching the proceedings, and, crossing the room, pulled her mother's sleeve. "Mamma," she said, "I want to be in that parade, too."

He Bought It Cheap.

Uncle (who is very close)—Freddy, here's a nice knife I bought for you to-day. Freddy—Thank you. Who is selling out?

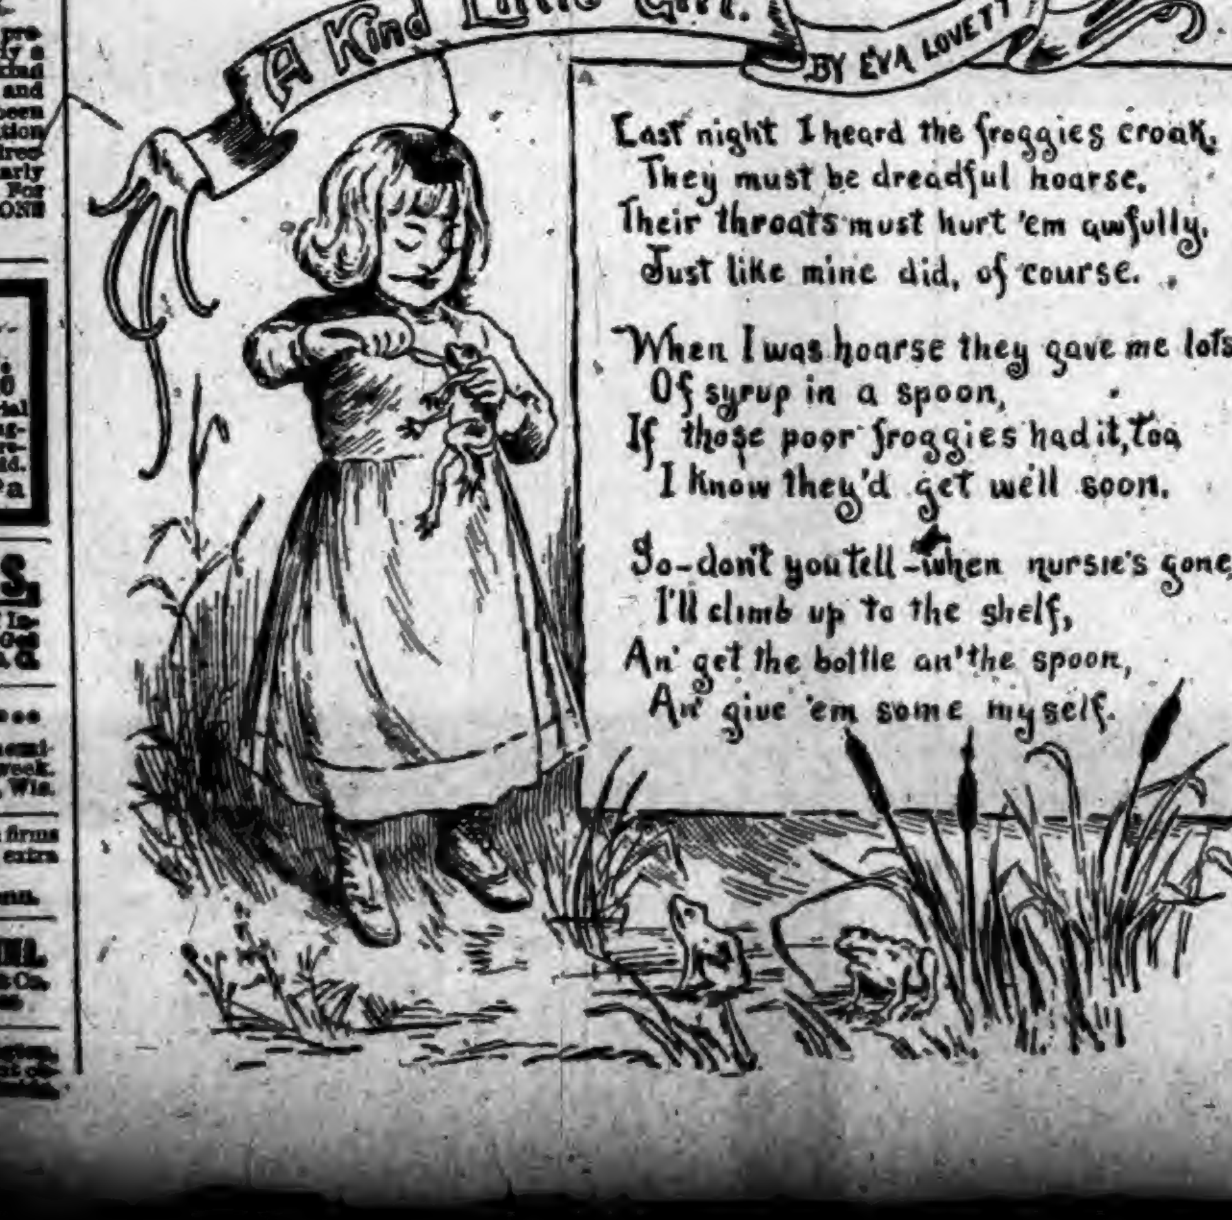
One Boy's Idea.

Minister—Tommy, what is happiness? Tommy (promptly)—It's when you're eatin'.—Truth.

Gambling in Russia.

In no part of the world has gambling developed to such an extent as in Russia. Like an epidemic it has seized upon the higher class of society, chiefly the nobility and persons of leisure, who stake and lose large fortunes on games of chance, utterly regardless of consequences. Every elegantly appointed home has its billiard and card rooms, and in the latter as many as fifteen tables may be found occupied at one time; indeed, the play is frequently continued all through the night, until daylight warns the excited people that it is time to cease.

Gambling in Russia is not confined to the male sex alone, for ladies constantly visit the clubs, and are quite as reckless in their play as the father, husband, or brother who accompanies them. During the excitement of gambling persons of both sexes indulge in cigarette smoking, and it is quite amusing to see how deftly ladies will prepare and roll the little comforters. The Lenten season is a particularly happy time for the indulgence of this pastime, as balls and many other forms of gaiety are then prohibited.



A Kind Little Girl.

BY EVA LOVETT

Last night I heard the froggies croak,
They must be dreadful hoarse,
Their throats must hurt 'em awfully,
Just like mine did, of course.

When I was hoarse they gave me lots
Of syrup in a spoon,
If those poor froggies had it, too
I know they'd get well soon.

So—don't you tell—when nursie's gone
I'll climb up to the shelf,
An' get the bottle an' the spoon,
An' give 'em some myself.

A PLUNGE TO DEATH.

SPAN OF THE RAILWAY BRIDGE AT LOUISVILLE FALLS.

Estimated Loss of Life Varies Greatly—Engineers Say the Disaster Was Due to Faulty Construction and Weak Girders—The Morgue and Hospitals Full.

Awful Scenes of Horror.

At 10:20 o'clock Friday morning the fourth span of the ill-fated Louisville and Jeffersonville bridge across the Ohio fell into the river. This proved to be the most frightful of the many disasters to the bridge, which has wrecked lives and swept away fortunes in a manner almost inconceivable. The bridge is under construction by the Phœnixville Bridge Company, of Phœnixville, Pa. Fifty men were at work on the bridge, all of whom were precipitated into the river. The dispatch says that the number killed will exceed twenty.

The bridge has been under construction for a number of years. Several times work has been suspended for lack of funds. Two years ago the Masonic Savings Bank failed because of its connection with the bridge company. Recently financial assistance was obtained and work was resumed. Three years ago in constructing the piers a dreadful accident happened at the caisson, resulting in the death of twelve men. Accidents have been frequent and from first to last it is said that fifty men have been killed. This accident was due to the insecure placing of the "traveler" Thursday night. The wind still further loosened it and in the morning the order was given to draw it back into its place and the engines were started. The wind was high and the swaying of the false work forced the "traveler" from the piles on which it was placed. When the end slipped off the men realized their danger. The engineer called to the men and ten of the fifty-one on the span escaped. Forty-one fell 110 feet into the water.

Witnessed by Many.

The shocking accident was witnessed by men employed along the river front and on the boats plying up and down the river. The ferry company at once sent two boats to assist in securing the bodies of the dead and dying and rescuing the workmen still alive. Both banks of the river were soon crowded with people. Many women were in the throngs, and it was apparent there were present the wives and children of those who had gone down to death. Three patrol wagons were kept busy and the guards were assisted by the fire department in carrying off the dead and injured. The wagons could not go to and from the hospital fast enough to receive those taken from the river. The injured were taken to the city hospital at the rate of about one a minute. All were unconcious and as a result their names could not be learned. Some were white and others colored.

J. W. Baird, Secretary and Treasurer of the bridge company, was one of the witnesses to the disaster. Mr. Baird was in the company's office, on the fourth floor of the Commerce Building. The bridge is in plain view of his room, and it is his custom to watch the progress of the workmen through his field-glasses. Even the shock of the sight of the terrible death plunge was enough to completely overcome him for a time. He said in reply to a question: "Yes, I am the originator of the plan to build the bridge, and I guess I will be eternally damned for it."

YACHT RACING.

Millions of Dollars Are Spent Yearly to Maintain the Sport.

The international race between the Vigilant and the Valkyrie makes interesting some account of yacht racing, the more so as most people do not know where the sport originated, nor what large sums of money are expended yearly for its maintenance. Charles II. of England was the first yachtsman, having received a yacht as a present from the Dutch East India Company in 1691. The king was also a boat-builder, and planned the Jamie, a 25-tonner, built at Lambeth, which he raced against the Bezan, a small Dutch-built vessel of the Duke of York. The prize was £100, won by the Bezan.

With Charles' death interest in yacht racing declined, and was not revived until 1720, when the Cork Harbor Water Club was founded. The club still exists as the Royal Cork Yacht Club, and has done much to popularize the sport.

Yacht racing received its greatest impetus in 1812, with the organization of the Royal Yacht Club of Cowes. This is now known as the Royal Yacht Squadron. At first the vessels of the club were small, their number not exceeding fifty all told. This little fleet has grown into the enormous roll of over 6,000, of which about one-fourth are steam vessels. Estimating the total tonnage at 300,000, and the initial cost at $225 per ton, the magnificent sum of $67,500,000 must have been expended alone for the building of this fleet of pleasure craft. The annual expenditure, including the maintenance of the vessels, is estimated at nearly $15,000,000; and, while it is scarcely possible to calculate the number of men engaged on shore in connection with the yacht-building industry, those employed with the management of the fleet at sea number not less than 12,000 men.

Yachting has become very popular in America in recent years, and the American Register says there are now, in this country, upward of 1,300 vessels, steam and sail, and that the number of clubs exceeds seventy.

It Failed.

"Stranger," said the young man with the white hair and the dyed mustache to the photographer, "I am here to git my picture took, and I'll tell you how it is. I've just popped the question to a widder down our way, with four acres of as good ground as ever a hog stuck his nose into, and I am now goin' to read her answer. When you see the pleasant smile stealin' over my face, I want you to fire off your ole machine and let 'er go."

"All right."

The young man took his position, but he didn't get the photograph taken. Instead, he rose to go without a word.

"What's the matter?" asked the photographer.

"There hain't nothin' the matter, 'ceptin' that she say's she stuck on a preacher, and that I ain't got the sense I was borned with, that's all."—Indianapolis Journal.

Wasting Time.

They were dining in a restaurant.

"You see," he explained, as he showed her the wishbone, "you take hold here and I'll take hold here. Then we must both make a wish and pull, and when it breaks the one who has the biggest part of it will have his or her wish gratified."

"But I don't know what to wish for," she protested.

"O, you can think of something," he said.

"No, I can't," she replied: "I can't think of anything I want very much."

"Well, I'll wish for you," he exclaimed.

"Will you, really?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Well, then, there's no use fooling with the old wishbone, "she interrupted with a glad smile, "you can have me."—Pearson's Weekly.

An Extra for the Chaperon.

It takes the "well brought up" child to discover the hidden meaning of things. The other evening, at Mrs. E—'s in K street, somebody was showing a picture of an artistic loving-cup which had just been presented to a famous actor by his professional brethren. One of the party remarked that it had always been a marvel to him why a loving-cup should have three handles.

"I can account," said he, "for one handle as belonging to the lover and the other as belonging to the beloved; but the third handle—"

The shrill little voice of Mrs. E—'s youngest, who has seen two elder sisters pass through the marriageable period, piped up:

"That's for the chaperon."—Kate Field's Washington.

Two Ways of Looking at a Bequest.

A naive account is told in a Paris newspaper of the death of the Princess Youssoupoff, who had an income of a million francs and the most wonderful turquoises in the world. Her demise is treated as a somewhat whimsical caprice. She was married to a man much younger than herself, who, dying, she went into a decline. Much more reasonable was the conduct of the man who in the railway car asked his neighbor to please put down the window. "I have just come into ten thousand a year and I feel I must take care of myself."—New York Sun.

"Stroke of Jarnac."

It is a sword stroke which the Sieur de Jarnac, a French gentleman, inflicted on M. de la Chataigneraye in 1547. The latter had insulted Jarnac, who challenged him to single combat. La Chataigneraye, was a skillful swordsman, and a noted bully. They met on June 10, 1547. De Jarnac suddenly hamstrung him so that he could not stand up erect, and then departed, disdaining to kill him. So a "Jarnac blow" is a blow inflicted on a boastful adversary which defeats him, but does not kill him, or, nowadays, does not permanently incapacitate him.

A Jew.

A Jew is "a member of a religious denomination." The three words Hebrew, Israelite, Jew, are used thus: Hebrew refers to the race, Israelite to the nation, Jew to the religion. Thus the race of Hebrews, or people from a land of rivers, is cognate to the Arabs and Ethiopians, the Aramæans, the Babylonians and Assyrians, the Israelites were the people who made the exodus from Egypt, and formed the Kingdom of Israel; as to their religion, they were Jews. A Gentile may become a Jew, but he cannot become a Hebrew or an Israelite.

An Osculatory Feat.

Readers are familiar with the picture which represents a little child in night attire standing before its mother's mirror and kissing the image reflected by fithe glass. Mrs. Newly Rich recently called upon one of our New York portrait artists and desired a copy of the picture painted of her daughter, but explained:—

"I do not believe in kissing upon the lips, so you will please paint it so that she will be kissing the reflection on the forehead."

The Only Way

To Cure Catarrh in the head is to remove from the blood the impurities which cause and feed it. This can be done by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, which effectually expels all traces of poison and germs of disease and permanently cures Catarrh.

He Hurried Her Up.

"How long before the train to Baltimore starts?" said the woman who was fumbling at her pocketbook in a leisurely way.

"One minute," replied the ticket-seller.

"How many stops does it make—did you say only one minute?" she exclaimed, stopping in the midst of her question.

"Yes'm."

"Goodness gracious! Here, give me a ticket quick."

"You were mistaken," said the traveling man who was next in line. "That train doesn't leave for five minutes."

"I know it. But as I have kept nine people from missing the train I guess the recording angel 'll draw it a little mild in my behalf."—Washington Star.

Wanted It Absolutely Safe.

When the panic was at its hight an excited porter in a south side hotel asked for half an hour's leave of absence one day in order that he might take his money out of a bank and put it in a safer place. It was granted, and at the end of the stipulated time he returned, looking immensely relieved.

"Well, Jacobs," said his employer, "did you draw your money out?"

"I did, sir," replied Jacobs.

"What bank was it in?"

"It was in a safety deposit vault."

"The mischief it was! And, where have you deposited it now?"

"I gave it to the old woman, sir."—Chicago Tribune.

Eyes Were Sweating.

Little Mabel is fond of her brothers and sisters, and one day when they were scuffling somewhat roughly she became frightened and almost started to cry. When she saw that they were only fooling she tried to look unconcerned; but her big brother noticed the struggle she was having to keep back the tears.

"What's the matter, Mabel?" he asked.

"Nothing," lisped the tot.

"But your eyes are wet."

Gilding the Dome.

The Government is now having the new congressional library dome gilded, and when the work is done it will be the largest gilded dome in the world, but it will represent the treasury of the country as a good deal richer than it really is. A Timely Bit of Advice.

In these times of grippe and pneumonia it is of great importance that we should know where to look for a safe and sure remedy. A slight cold may become a serious one, the scarcely noticeable pain in the chest is often the forerunner of pneumonia. The first cough may lead to consumption (a cough is always dangerous). Never neglect a cold or cough for even a day, but get at once, a safe and sure remedy. Kemp's Balsam, the best cough cure, which is recommended on all sides. It should be kept in the house regularly to avoid delay when needed. It is sold in all the drug stores.

Wonderful in Its Effects.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

A Prosperous Institution.

The annual report of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company for the year ending June 30, 1893, contains a synopsis of the operations of the relief department of that company, which shows it to be in a most prosperous condition.

The department had a membership of 22,637 persons; the receipts of the relief feature for the year were $425,508.32 and the disbursements, $415,554.39, and the benefits paid to its members since May 1, 1880, aggregate the enormous sum of $3,83[illegible].17.

In the saving feature of the department, at the close of the fiscal year, there was due depositors $830,386.06, as against $692,547.05 at the close of the previous year; the deposits during the years were $326,049.77, the withdrawals $188,210.76, and the amount due from employes on account of loans made for the purpose of securing homes was $601,239.26. An extra dividend of one percent was declared on all deposits drawing interest at the close of the year, thus making the interest for the year equivalent to five per cent per annum.

At the close of the year there were 210 names on the pension list, and the disbursements on this account for the year have been $81,954.35, and for the whole period, $201,084.16.

Frank Blair and family are here, called by the death of his mother.

Mrs. L. J. Blair died Tuesday and will be buried to-morrow, Friday, at 10 a. m.

The prospect at present is that the ground will be covered with snow Christmas. It snows more or less each day and the clouds seem weighted with it.

The L. M. C. held their regular session the evening of Dec 18, at the home of Mrs. Mary Boozer at the extreme east end of town. Program: responses. Winter; The American Revolution, leader, Mrs. Erance; recitation, Miss Blair; prose medley, Mrs. V. C. Jackman; table talk, Geography of the Heavens, led by Mrs. Winslow.

Sickness has prevailed far more than usual in Waterloo at this season of the year, although but two cases have terminated fatally. Mrs. Bowlby is sick with lung fever. Mr. Davidson has for five weeks had a low form of fever and now suffers from nervous prostration. Ira Fee has two children sick with scarlet fever. Many persons have had the grip. Some have been very ill with it.

Saturday morning, Rev. U. S. A. Bridge had a very sudden attack in which he became unconscious and fell to the floor, and so serious that for a time those around him thought he might die at any moment. He rallied finally, however, and even filled his appointment the next evening and preached a most excellent and interesting sermon on "What we Know and What of Necessity Must be Matters of Belief." Their little child who has been very sick, is recovering.

GARRETT.

Merry Christmas.

Attend the theater next week.

Billy Beehler was at Butler last week.

Miss Ella Vanscoick is on the sick list.

Frank Walters was at Bremen last week.

Mrs. W. J. Sharp visited at Milwaukee last week.

I. J. Stewart, of Battle Creek, Mich., is visiting here.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Thumma are at Wolf Lake, this week.

Engineer C. C. Suter is visiting relatives at Harrisburg, Va.

The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Clark is reported quite sick.

Conductor J. G. Philbrick was was at Mark Center, Ohio, last week.

Mrs. Bibbs died Sunday of cancer and was buried at Auburn, Monday.

Mrs. H. N. Coffinberry and son Willie, of Auburn, were in the city last week.

The seven year old child of Matthias Richter died last week of typhoid fever.

S. C. Lauber, the shoe man, is confined to the house with an attack of bilious fever.

Help the fire company out by purchasing a ticket to their dance Christmas night.

There are 180 pupils enrolled in the Catholic schools and 500 in the public schools of this city.

J. W. Abrams and J. F. Dawson will start a cigar factory over P. K. David's grocery in the near future.

Mrs. H. L. Keester, whose husband died a short time ago, received $600 from the B. & O. Relief Association the other day.

We hear that Ed. Sanders and Charley Strouse will leave shortly for South America, where they will work on a railroad.

Seats are now on sale at "The Fair" for the entertainment given by the Riley dramatic company. Prices 15, 25 and 35 cents.

Conductor Newt Hall has returned from Mt. Clemens, Michigan, where he has been receiving treatment for rheumatism. He is greatly improved in health.

The first and second numbers of the Garrett Republican have reached us. It is fairly gotten up and contains all the news of the city. We bespeak for Miner & Son a successful future.

Engineers R. Lantz and G. A. Bowersox returned from Baltimore last week, where they were in attendance at Master Mechanic Geo. R. Ott's funeral. They cannot say enough of the hospitalities shown them by the people of that city.

The sixteenth annual ball of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers will be held at Wagner's opera house January 1, 1894. The engineers always give a good dance and if you are a lover of this kind of sport you should attend.

The Riley dramatic company, which begins a four nights' engagement here next Monday evening, have with them one of the well known and popular ladies of the stage, Miss Agatha Singleton. Be sure and get seats early. They are going to have crowded houses.

The tin box which was stolen from Postmaster Bicknell and containing two registered letters, stamps and money, was found under a school house in the northern part of the county last week. Nothing remained but the registered letters. The box is now in possession of Sheriff Ralston at Auburn.

The third annual ball of the Garrett city fire department will be given at the opera house Christmas night. The Riley dramatic company have kindly consented to raise the curtain at 7 o'clock sharp, so as to conclude their performance in time for the grand march at 9:30 p. m. By this arrangement all will have an opportunity to see the show and attend the dance without inconvenience.

Prof. Wm. J. Johnston, of Greencastle, this state, will deliver a lecture at the First Baptist church Friday evening on "Eden and Calvary and Beyond." The small admission of 20 cents for adults and 5 cents for children under twelve years, will be charged. In the afternoon he will give an entertainment on the "World's Fair." Fifty per cent. of the proceeds will go to to the church. Help the Baptist people out by attending the lecture.

The funeral of Geo. B. Ott, formerly master mechanic of the B. & O. shops here, at Baltimore, Md., last week, was largely attended by railroad men. The pall bearers were Howard Carlton, W. E. Grieves and F. J. Cole, of Baltimore, and Dr. F. B. Wood, R. Lantz and G. A. Bowersox, of this city. Many flowers were sent from abroad, among which was a broken wheel from the machinery department of the B. & O., pillow from the officials of the Chicago division, wreath from friends at Garrett, and triangle from Pythian sisters of Garrett. Mrs Ott and family will return to Garrett and look after some private matters, after which they will return to Baltimore where they will make their future home. We regret to lose them as citizens of our city, yet we wish them abundant success in their eastern home.

BUTLER.

J. A. Campbell is having a siege of grip.

Charles Sine, of Ashley, paid Butler a short visit last Saturday. He says he wishes he could live in Butler again.

Some conscienceless thief visited Mrs. J. A. Campbell's poultry house one night last week and carried off a dozen of her nicest chickens.

Frank Brink, of Newville, has moved to Butler and opened a law office in Dr. Barnett's old office. We believe he has been appointed deputy prosecutor.

The churches are about all making a diligent effort to have a nice Christmas entertainment. Presents are not likely to be so numerous and expensive as heretofore owing to the hard times and scarcity of money.

Much genuine sorrow is felt by our people over the unfortunate and fatal fire at Auburn. This establishment, the Church Furniture Co., has always been regarded as a good, honest and worthy enterprise and to have it destroyed now is a sad misfortune.

A dwelling on the south side owned by Charles and Martin Hook and occupied by E. B. Daily, had a narrow escape from fire last week. Mrs. Daily was heating some inflammable stove polish, when it ignited, filling the room with flame, bursting out at the transom. Mrs. Daily had sufficient presence of mind to pile carpet and other heavy fabrics on the fire and succeeded in smothering the flames. The flames made nearly a clean sweep of what was in the room and damaged the house considerably. Each of the parties happened to be insured.

CONCORD.

Mrs. Bone is kept busy making dresses.

Ulysses Zimmerman and family of Auburn, are here visiting Mr. Z's mother, Mrs. Katherine Zimmerman.

Mrs. Edward Rorabaugh, from south of Waterloo, is home this week visiting and sewing for her mother, Mrs. Emaline Smith.

GAS ADDITION.

Mrs. Mart Apple and child have been on the sick list.

George Reed has been on the sick list, but is out again.

Frank Jones and wife are visiting in the country with Mrs. Jones' parents.

H. C. Croy and wife, of Blakeslee, O., were the guests of his father, H. A. Croy, one evening last week. He reports a great deal of sickness in that section.

Mrs B. Metcalf bought a lot on Seventh street in McClellan & Baxter's addition to Gastown and her son-in-law, Jacob Richards, is building her a house upon it.

The protracted meeting that has been in progress at the Church of God, closed last Sunday evening, H. A. Croy filling the pulpit. The house was well filled. Elder Stewart, from Garrett, preached Sunday forenoon.

Obituary.

Thomas Cochran was born in Perry county, Ohio, August 24, 1815. He departed this life December 14, 1893, aged 78 years, 3 months and 21 days. His father was a native of Pennsylvania and his mother was a native of Ireland, coming to America in childhood. He was united in marriage to Miss Amanda Loine March 17, 1844. To this union were born 13 children, five daughters and eight sons, eleven of whom are still living. In September, 1858, he moved to Indiana, purchasing a farm in Richland, now Keyser, township, where he has since resided. There were about twenty-five acres of cleared land, though unimproved, when he settled down here. The old home stands out to-day as a monument of his years of hard toil. He has been an industrious, energetic man and prosperity has crowned his labors. About 16 years ago, Mr. Cochran and wife united with the Baptist church at Auburn, under the labors of Rev. Sanders. Father Cochran was a lover of religious services. He lived a quiet, sober and pious christian life and was ever looking forth with a joyful anticipation to the time when he might bid adieu to the things of time and sense and go and be with his Master. Father Cochran had read the precious promises of Christ through the tears of sorrow. He knew by experience the feeling of a broken heart. July 14, 1850, he laid to rest his son Edward. May 8, 1864, he bid farewell to his daughter Ida. Sorrow seemed to subside for a season, but at last it came with a more crushing weight three years ago the 26th of February, 1890. The relentless hand of death snatched from his embrace the dearest object of his love and affection; yea, his bosom friend, and he was left to battle with the stern realities of life alone. But last Thursday evening he laid down the weapons of warfare and entered upon rest. He laid down the cross and took up the crown. He said good night to children dear, but said good morning to dear ones in the land of the blest. Death to him was infinite gain. Father Cochran leaves behind him eleven children, fourteen grandchildren, one great-grandchild and a brother who could not be present on account of sickness, and a host of friends and neighbors to mourn his departure. He loved his family and sought their highest good as far as possible. His kindness, as a father, to his family could not be surpassed. Two sons in the far west could not come to attend the funeral of their father. May this family, though scattered now, be gathered in that day and form one unbroken family around the throne of thrones. Mr. Cochran was a good neighbor and gained the respect of all he came in contact with. The funeral services were conducted from the house last Sabbath at 10 a. m. Interment took place in Woodlawn cemetery, J. D. Brosy officiating.

A Neighborly Act.

The people about St. John showed their kindly feelings for a worthy neighbor last week. On Wednesday evening a number of the young people met at Wm. Feagler's and took up a cash collection to buy a chair for old Mrs. Groves. The money was put in the hands of 'Squire Hoffman, and next day he came to town and bought the chair, having some money left over. That evening the married people met at Wm Fair's and from there went to Mrs. Groves', giving her the chair, the extra cash and a big donation of provisions, etc. The old lady was very grateful for these tokens. Among the young people assisting were: Fred and James Hogue, Ed and Lew Treesh, Percie and Genie Cornell, Frank, Ted, Orville Clinton and George Feagler, Ora, Bertie, Gracie, Hettie and Nellie Lockwood, John Mann, J. G. Lawhead, Ervin and Amos Hartler, Sam Balentine, John Reever, U. G. and Louie Hoffman, Effie Borland, Blanche Fair, Nellie Klum, Maud and Rhoda Housei, Ida and Florence Grube, Miss Humpert, Florcia and Wanda Walter, Carrie Ensley. John Noel contributed, but was not present. The following gentlemen and their wives are the married people who assisted: W. A. Feagler, M. L. Hoffman, C. H. Baber, J. L. Fair, P. Noel, W. H. Fair, Geo. Reever, Geo. Hines, D. N. Terry, James Gale. Mrs. James Hogue was present, besides many who gave but could not attend.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy: a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

A Sad Death.

Can you describe anything worse than a young man dying by inches with consumption; cut off in the bloom of youth when bright prospects of happiness and prosperity are before him, a very sad death indeed. Is it not a fact that most cases of this kind are brought on by a cough, only slight at first, then more violent, followed by night sweats and a general breaking down of the entire system. These are cases in which people are to blame. Why not check this slight cough. Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup is guaranteed to cure. It will prevent consumption. Use it before it is too late. By druggists. Price .25, .50 and $1.

A Beverly, Mass., man was fined $5 for slapping his wife in the face and $15 for assaulting the policeman who arrested him. There seems to be something wrong with the Beverly police court's tariff.

Health and Happiness!

HONEY OF FIGS is the QUEEN of all cathartics; syrups or pills. One anticipates its taking with pleasure. No other remedy sells so well or gives such satisfaction. It acts gently on inactive bowels or liver, relieves the kidneys, cures constipation, colds, fevers, nervous headaches, etc., and restores the beauty of health. Ladies and children prefer it. Doctors and druggists recommend it. The Fig Honey Co. of San Francisco. Try a bottle. Only one cent a dose. Matheny & Gerke wholesale and retail agents for DeKalb county.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

ISAAC HAGUE,

HARPER'S MAGAZINE ILLUSTRATED.

Harpers' Weekly is beyong all question the leading journal in America, in its splendid illustrations, in its corps of distinguished contributors, and in its vast army of readers. In special lines, it draws on the highest order of talent, the men best fitted by position and training to treat the leading topics of the day. In fiction the most popular story-writers contribute to its columns. Superb drawings by the foremost artists illustrate its special articles, its stories, and every notable event of public interest; it contains portraits of the distinguished men and women who are making the history of the time, while special attention is given to the Army and Navy, Amateur Sport, and Music and the Drama, by distinguished experts. In a word, Harper's Weekly combines the news features of the daily paper and the artistic and literary qualities of the magazine with the solid critical character of the review.

Personal.

Bear in mind one thing, that if business, pleasure or necessity calls you away from home at any time, be sure to have your route fully decided upon and arranged before starting.

Many things should be taken into consideration, especially the inducements offered by the Wisconsin Central Company to those who wish to visit St. Paul, Minneapolis, Ashland, West Superior, Duluth or any point in Wisconsin.

Their trains leave Chicago at convenient hours. Their equipment is unsurpassed by any line in the Northwest.

Close connections are made at St. Paul and Minneapolis with the various lines running to all California and Pacific coast points.

Ask your nearest ticket agent for full information, and be particular to see that your ticket reads via the "Wisconsin Central Lines."

Some Reminiscences of Its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1875 CONTINUED.

In the spring of 1875 a first view gave an impression of a very uninviting place. The ground was low, but save a small lake, was capable of perfect drainage. The important matter of legal record of a plat of the land purchased and laid out was attended to on April 9, and at once sale of lots began, although prior to the record, O. C. Clark had negotiated for lots on which later stood the store building of C. Reyher and the brick owned by M. L. Duck and occupied by Walters as a hardware store.

W. Cowen had his office in an abandoned farmhouse a half mile south of the track and his first plat was of 150 acres in blocks of lots which, with railroad grounds in the center, made nearly 200 acres within town limits.

The first lot situated on a corner of Cowen and Quincy streets, was sold to Nathan Tarney on April 13, and upon this lot he erected a two story building, which, as the Tarney House, has been used as a hotel by him ever since.

There was a great demand for lots and Mr. Cowen was kept almost constantly at work filling out contracts so that by May 1, fifty lots had been sold under a contract that within eighteen months the railroad company would have a thousand men permanently employed in shops in the new town. As evidence of the push of interested parties and the magnitude of projected improvements, streets were graded, sidewalks were put down by the company, and three million brick were bargained for to be used for shops, road houses, and a three story block to be used as a hotel.

By Sept. 1, where four months earlier there was not a town building east of the Tamarack, there had grown up a place numbering four hundred actual inhabitants. Still in this gratifying prosperity, so rapid had been the growth of the town that on Dec. 18, population warranted an election for the purpose of incorporation.

Alert speculators purchased adjacent farm lands as soon as the plans of the company were developed, and on Nov. 19 Thomas' South Addition was platted and was followed Nov. 30, by Toland's East Addition. One year after filing the original plat, Cowen's First Addition was recorded and subsequent additions have have kept pace with the surprising and constant increase of population and demands for expansion of business and residence interests.

A large and costly mill was erected, a fine school house was built with proceeds of a sale of bonds and extensive shops were put up.

This brief sketch of Garrett presents the beginning of a course of almost unbroken prosperity. Her growth has been remarkable. She is in population the metropolis of DeKalb county, and her politicians dominate in the conventions of political parties. Her position as a division terminus on a great railway, with the shops requiring hundreds of workmen, practically insure her against decadence, and the abounding faith in the future of her citizens, combined with their hospitality to strangers as well as friends, and their American push, give strong grounds for a long continuance of the advancement that warranted its assuming the important dignity of a railroad city.

The rise of Garrett, centrally located on the line between the townships of Butler and Richland, made it a public necessity to organize a new township out of the two northern tiers of sections of the former and two southern tiers of the latter. A petition asking the formation of such township was presented April 3, 1876, by Thomas Maloney and others to the commissioners of the county. Action was deferred until June 2 of the regular session, when the territory described was decreed to exist as Clark township. Two days later the name was changed to Keyser township and as such it has since been known.

The vitality, growth and importance seen in Garrett make manifest the great advantages that would have accrued to Auburn had the railroad improvements been made at Sheets' crossing as was originally intended, but our town has not sensibly felt the loss and has in common with other corporations in the county, been remunerated by the creation and upbuilding of so fine a town.

Something of the same kind has recently been repeated in the founding of a town named Ashley a little east of Hudson on the line between DeKalb and Steuben counties and the removal thither from Butler of some interests connected with the new Wabash line.

It seems a matter worthy of mention that on June 27, 1875, the circus of old John Robinson was billed for Auburn and many who were children then, had the pleasure of taking their children to the same show which returned to Auburn during August, 1893, with novel and entertaing features and was welcomed by thronging thousands. The ardor and curiosity of former days awakened mildly, in the sedate thoughts of middle age, and the feeding of wild beasts and reckless racing touched pleasantly a chord of happy memories.

A little more than a decade had passed since the old court house had been replaced by the present structure and action long delayed was now taken towards replacing the old jail with one of modern style, capacity and security. On Jan. 15, 1875, eleven bids were filed with the county commissioners for building a new jail according to plans and specifications prepared by T. J. Toland and approved by the Board. Some of these bids were remarkably alike, as will be seen in the following exhibit of contractors and the amount of their respective bids.

Crane, Duncan & Co.	$26,570
Sutermeister & Co.	26,700
C. Bouker	26,779
A. J. Canfield	27,000
J. M. Bratton	28,897
Wm. H. Myers	28,900
G. M. Maxwell	30,100
Brace & Reed	31,300
B. C. Colgrove	31,770
Clafton & Mouhler	33,917
G. W. Pollen	47,150

The contract was awarded to Messrs. Crane, Duncan & Co., of Waterloo, this home firm being the lowest on the list. The question was then sprung as to the best location for the building and, strangely enough, there were not wanting those who opposed its being on the public square. Some others were desirous that it be built on the northeast corner of the square, and yet others asked that it be placed on lots fronting Cedar street east of the public grounds. In relation to this last proposition, the board offered to exchange certain creek bottom lots, the town to make up the difference in values, but few names appeared upon a petition for a removal.

Thomas Baldock having been approached on the subject, offered his property, 132 feet front by 142 feet deep, located on the northeast corner of Cedar and Seventh streets, for $4,000, and agreed to remove all buildings. It was urged upon the Board to go into a real estate speculation and sell such lots for business houses as were were not needed for the prison, but they wisely concluded that the the old site was most convenient, the building would be an ornamont to the public grounds which had been provided for this very purpose and were the only proper place for the structure.

Roll of Honor.

The following is a list of the names of pupils in district No. 11, Richland township, Dekalb county, Ind., who were not tardy for two months, ending December 22, 1893:

Nellie Grogg,
Ira Grogg,
Ida Grogg,
Ada Grogg,
Manda Grogg,
Harrison Grogg,
Sissie Mathews,
Clinton Nicholas,
J. Bernear,
Roy Bernear,
Otis Loutzenheiser,
Lydia Mason,
Lizzie Maron,
Josie Mason,
Milo Mason,
Stella Chittendon,
Minnie Chittendon,
Eddie Beard,
Herman Swander.

When it is known that the school has an enrollment of only twenty-five pupils and that our school register is so arranged that all absence less than one half day are to be kept as tardy, and that each pupil who came into school three minutes after 9 a. m. was considered tardy, the above is certainly self-evidence that both parents and pupils are interested in school, which makes the task much lighter for the teacher.

N. B. HATHAWAY, Teacher.

Literary Note.

The second edition of the December World's Fair Cosmopolitan brings the total up to the extraordinary figures of 400,000 copies, an unprecedented result in the history of magazines. Four hundred thousand copies—200 tons—ninety four million pages—enough to fill 200 wagons with 2,000 pounds each—in a single line, in close order, this would be a file of wagons more than a mile and a half long. This means not less than 2,000,000 readers, scattered throughout every town and village in the United States. The course of the Cosmopolitan for the past twelve months may be compared to that of a rolling snowball; more subscribers means more money spent in buying the best articles and best illustrations in the world; better illustrations and better articles mean more subscribers, and so the two things are acting and reacting upon each other until it seems probable that the day is not far distant when the magazine publisher will be able to give readers so excellent an article that it will claim the attention of every intelligent reader in the country.

In Memoriam.

Mrs. Mary (Brace) Blair, wife of Gen. L. J. Blair, departed this life at her home in Waterloo, Ind., Dec. 19, 1893, at the age of 62 years, 9 months and 6 days.

Mary Brace was born in Geauga county, Ohio, March 13, 1830. In the fall of 1842 she came with her parents Manley and Margaret Brace, to DeKalb county, Ind., but not long afterwards, they moved to Hillsdale, Michigan, where her father died. The mother soon moved to Steuben county, Ind., with her family, then consisting of two sons and four daughters, and settled near Pleasant Lake. Here she remained about two years when she returned to DeKalb county. The subject of this obituary was then about nineteen years of age. On March 10, 1853, she was united in marriage to Lewis J. Blair, and to them were born three children, Mrs. Ida Daniels, of Fairmont, Minnesota, Miss Rose Blair, who resides at home, and Frank P. Blair, of Laporte, Ind., who all with the bereaved husband remain to mourn for her. From their home at Newville, the husband went into the service during the rebellion, and on his return, they moved to Auburn, and a few years later to Waterloo, the present home.

Mrs. Blair at an early age, became identified with the M. E. Church, and remained a consistent christian woman till her death. Always warm heated, liberal, womanly, none knew her but felt the force of these admirable traits and all who came into her presence, felt the elevating influence of her kindly nature. She leaves a large circle of acquaintances, all of whom were friends to mourn her loss and sympathize with the bereaved family.

The funeral services were held at their home, at 10 a. m. Dec. 22, and she was laid to her final rest in the beautiful cemetry in Waterloo. Rev. Mr. Myers, of the Waterloo Presbyterian Church, conducted the services.

In Memoriam.

Mary M. Pixley was born in Vermillion, Ohio, October 27th, 1851, and when but a small child came with her parents to Steuben county, Ind., where she grew up to womanhood.

Early in life she united with the Baptist Church, and to the end was a firm believer in the soul's immortality. To her

"Hope was an echo of the soul,
Which told her of a world to be,
E'en as travelers hear the billows roll,
Before they reach the sea."

On the 4th day of July, 1873, she was united in marriage to Calvin E. Van Auken, To their union was born ten children, four sons and six daughters, but nine survive her, one son dying in infancy.

Fifteen years of her married life were spent at Pleasant Lake, the home of her girlhood—the last five at Auburn, Ind.

About one year ago the terrible revelation was made to herself and family that she was afflicted with that dread malady, cancer, since which time every effort that love could dictate has been made for her. But neither medical skill, the art of surgery, nor love of friends and family could win back the waning powers of life. For a year she bore her terrible ordeal with heroic fortitude, until on the 18th day of December, 1893, at the age of 42 years, one month and 21 day, tired of life's rugged journey, she gladly welcomed death.

Those who witnessed her terrible suffering through so many weeks may well exclaim—

"Thank Heaven the crisis,—
The danger is past,
And the lingering illness,
Is over at last,
And the fever called 'living'
Is conquered at last."

Resolutions of Respect.

AUBURN, IND., Dec. 26.

NEWS GATHERED IN.

THE CRISIS IN THE BRAZILIAN REVOLUTION AT HAND.

Tramps Terrorize Hartford City, Ind.—The Steamer Seneca Scuttled at Havana—Rioting at Palermo—Another Cut on the Pennsylvania Road.

In the Hands of a Receiver.

Chicago special: An injunction has been served on the Guarantee Investment Company at its offices in the Adams Express building by the Sheriff in the suit commenced by Sylvina Gerbrick, which practically prevents the company from transacting any business in Chicago during its pendency. By its terms the company is restrained from disposing of or receiving payments on its bonds; from disposing of securities deposited with the State Treasurer of Missouri, from withdrawing any moneys on deposit in Chicago banks and from disposing of any of its office fixtures here or of its books and papers of account. This injunction was granted by Judge Windes upon the recommendation of Master-in-Chancery Leaming.

Attorney Aaron Adams, who represents the complaint, claimed to have received an order from the court appointing Thomas J. Hurley receiver of the company and he has taken charge of the company.

The Crisis at Hand.

Washington special: Minister Mendonca of Brazil believes the crisis in the Brazilian revolution is at hand, and that a decisive stroke will be made soon. He says that the two great ironclads of the rebel commander, Mello, and the flotilla of little torpedo craft hastily improvised by President Peixoto are rapidly nearing each other. The Minister says the collision is almost certain to occur shortly. He recognizes that the little torpedo and dynamite boats are tremendously overmatched by the rebel ships, but counts much on the ability of the small boats to manœuver quickly and discharge their naval explosives. Senator Mendonca feels confident that the flotilla will defeat them and that the Piexoto ships will then be able to turn their attention to the other rebel Admiral, Gama, in Rio harbor.

Off for Rio de Janeiro.

Washington special: The promptitude with which New York was made ready for sea and the fact that the work of coaling her was pushed all through Christmas leads to the conclusion that the Secretary of the Navy considers her presence at Rio of great urgency. He says that no destination had been fixed for the Miantonomah, but it is extremely probable that she also will go to Rio as soon as she is in readiness for the trip. The supposed fear of confusion in the Brazilian Government and consequent danger from violence is what has caused the centering of a formidable naval force at Rio.

Tough Tramps.

Hartford City (Ind.) special: A band of tramps armed with revolvers, has been having things their own way among the citizens of the southside until the other day, when six of the band were captured after an exchange of several volleys during which one of the citizens and a tramp were shot. The gang held up a man in that locality in one of the saloons. They exhibited a well filled money sack, variously estimated to contain from $500 to $1,000. The leader escaped and it is supposed he carried off the money.

Rioting at Palermo.

Palermo special: The rioting against the Octroci at Lecara de Friedd y continues. A crowd assembled before the Mayor's residence shouting, "Down with the Octroci." The rioters assaulted the gen d'arms with stones and hatchets. Troops were called out and fired upon the crowd and dispersed the rioters after four people had been wounded. It is said the riots are organized by people from the outside and the local working people do not participate in them.

A Ruined Cargo.

Havana special: The cargo of the New York and Cuba Mail Company's steamer Seneca, which was scuttled in this port the other night after putting back on account of fire, will prove an almost total loss. The action of the salt water will cause the hemp on board of her to turn black, and the cigars, tobacco, and coffee are, of course, irretrievably ruined.

Another Cut on the Pennsylvania.

It is authoritatively announced that another heavy reduction in working forces of the Pennsylvania Railroad will be made January 1. The discharges will extend all over the lines between New York and Pittsburgh, but not further west.

Attempted to Saw a Man's Head Off.

August Noetting of Bellevue, Pa., has been arrested for attempting to saw off the head of Henry Doetzenroth. The men had a fight, and, getting Doetzenroth down, Noetting inflicted an ugly cut in his neck with a saw.

Another Crank Loose.

Phil. J. Schwartz, a crank, made an attempt to kill Mayor Henry S. Tyler in his office at Louisville, but was disarmed by the Mayor.

Arrest of Election Officers.

Four minor election officers have been arrested in New York charged with violation of the law at the recent election, making a total of sixty-one now indicted on these charges.

Cashier Dead.

Mr. Overton Price, late cashier of the wrecked Citizens' National Bank of Hillsboro, Ohio, died at Cincinnati from nervous prostration from mortification over the bank's failure.

Prisoners Released by a Mob.

At Russellville, Franklin County, Ala., a mob broke into the jail and released Dock and Lee Siles, two notorious Marion County murderers and outlaws, who were imprisoned for the murder of Postmaster Kirk at Ghin. The Marion County Jail was found unsafe, and some time ago the Siles boys were taken to Russellville for safe keeping. Three weeks ago the Sheriff heard that an attempt would be made to release the outlaws by their friends and he had a posse on hand one night when the attempt was made. As a result one of the would-be rescuers was killed and two others captured. The other night, however, the outlaws' friends took the jailer by surprise, burst open the doors, overpowered the jailer, and unlocking the cells let the two men out. A posse is searching for them. They are bad men, and it is safe to say will not be taken alive.

BRAZIL REBELLION.

Government Troops Driven from the Custom House and Other Places.

The London Times publishes the following from Rio de Janeiro, dated December 16, via Montevideo, December 20: Since my last dispatch, the insurgents have directed a heavy rifle and machine gun fire on the shore front, driving the government troops from the custom house, Largo Da Paco, and other points. All business in the city is practically stopped and there is no communication beween shipping and shore. The heavy artillery fire continues. Thursday, when the garrison of Villegaignon was dining, a shot from the Saoa Joao penetrated the casements, killing five, and wounding nine. Friday, five men at Fort Villegaignon were wounded. The Nictheroy is quiet. A thousand government troops, under Gen. Telles, Thursday, attempted to retake Governador Island, but the insurgents surrounded the invaders, cutting off retreat. Gen. Telles was one of the first wounded. The Government troops fled in all directions. The insurgents had seven wounded. Steam launches posted near the fort, report that no fugitives have yet attempted to recross to the mainland and it is thought probable that the Government troops are entrapped and will surrender.

DYNAMITE BOMBS.

They Still Continue to Worry the French Authorities.

Paris special: The police continue to receive a large number of suspicious looking packages, supposed by their finders to be infernal machines. These packages are either found in the streets or are addressed to individuals. Most of them on exhibition prove harmless, and are evidently intended to make people believe that the anarchists are still actively at work. Some of the specimens, however, are really dangerous. For instance, one found, a few days ago on the window sill of the Marie of the thirteenth arrondisement, was found to contain a quantity of blasting powder and seventy revolver cartridges. A fuse had been attached to the package but it had owing to some defect in the arm, burned out without causing an explosion. On the package were inscribed the words: "Death to the bourgeoisie."

Auguste Valliant, the anarchist under arrest for causing the explosion in the Chamber of Deputies, which crime he has confessed, has received donations amounting to 2,000 francs since he was lodged in prison.

No Change at Honolulu.

The Mariposa has arrived at San Francisco and brings the following Honolulu advices: The United States cutter Corwin has arrived here, bringing dispatches to Minister Willis, the contents of which have not yet been disclosed. The general belief here is that he is instructed to make every effort to restore the Queen short of using force. The provisional Government has prepared an ultimatum declaring their intention to resist with military force all attempts to overthrow them. The "American League" a secret society, whose object is the organization for resistence in arms to the restoration of the monarchy, is a society of a fairly high character and includes in its membership several of the best men in Honolulu. The bulk of its members is from the hardier class of American workingmen. Most of the well-known white royalists continue to express confidence in the restoration of the Queen by the United States forces. A few are cursing Minister Willis for his delay to carry out the President's policy.

Bank Officials Indicted.

The grand jury has finished investigation of the Indianapolis National Bank failure and returned seven indictments. They are against Theodore P. Haughey, President of the Indianapolis National Bank; E. E. Bexford, Cashier; R. D. E. Pierce, Director; Schuyler C. Haughey, President of the Indianapolis Glue Company, and the Indianapolis Curled Hair Works; Francis A. Coffin, President of the Indianapolis Cabinet Company; Percival B. Coffin, Secretary, and A. S. Reed Treasurer. Of those named, E. E. Rexford and Pierce had not previously been arrested. They gave bond. The indictment against Haughey makes a book of 492 typewritten pages. It contain 167 counts. It is charged in the indictment that he misapplied the funds of the bank, and made false entries and false reports to the comptroller of the currency.

Brazilian Affairs.

The New York Herald's correspondent in the Rio Janeiro sends word that San Borja has fallen into the hands of the rebels. Peixoto is organizing a fleet of ten vessels in the North, which will consist of cruisers and torpedo boats.

News has been received from Santa Catharina that Gen. Sarivia is continuing his march toward Rio. He is expecting the reinforcements which have been promised. Gen. Savares will continue the operations in the South.

The Minister of Marine has declined the offer of the Portugese cadets to enlist in the service of Brazil.

In consequence of Admiral Saldanha De Gama, chief of the naval school, having been declared a traitor, the school is closed. The officers and pupils must, however, report daily or be declared deserters and rebels.

A Daring Robbery.

Pacific Express Messenger McCullough was knocked down by a burly negro on the platform station at Marshall, Texas, and robbed of his pouch, containing an amount estimated at between $5,000 and $8,000. Immediately after knocking the messenger down, the negro grabbed the pouch and made his escape in the darkness. The scuffle and robbery was witnessed by about fifty persons about the depot, but it was all done so quickly no one had time to recover from his astonishment and interfere till the negro had disappeared. The unprecedented bold robber was not recognized by any one and was, apparently, an utter stranger. No one seems able to give anything like a coherent description of the robber, and no clew to his identity or whereabouts has yet been gleaned.

Hanged and Burned.

The house of Ben Nabors, near West's, Homes County, Miss., was burned. Later the body of Nabors was found in the ruins. It was in different portions of the building and bore evidence of having been dismembered. He had $12,000 of money, consisting of gold and silver in the house. Careful search failed to reveal any of it in the ruins. He lived alone with a negro youth and suspicion at once centered on him as being the murderer. A bloody ax was found concealed near the house. The negro was arrested and blood found on his clothing. No question existed among the excited neighbors about the negro's guilt as shown before the coroner's jury. The negro was hanged by a mob and his body burned.

Work for 25,000 Mill Hands.

New York special: The details of a transaction which will give prosperity to nearly 25,000 mill hands at Fall River, Mass., was made public in this city recently. By the recent purchase of about 80,000 pieces of cloths at a cost of more than $1,000,000, the overstocked market for print clothes has been relieved; the trade, which had become stagnant, has been given a new lease of life, and the demand for the goods has increased to such an extent that the Fall River mills have received orders which will keep them running through the winter, thus providing for 25,000 mill hands and in all about 40,000 persons dependent upon the mills for support.

Terrific Nitro Glycerine Explosion.

The magazine of the Acme Torpedo Company at Willow Grove, Pa., was blown to atoms by an explosion of a large quantity of nitro glycerine. Buildings for miles around were shaken and considerable damage was done. Every window glass in the town was shivered. No person was seriously injured. The explosion was caused by the glycerine becoming overheated from a fire built to thaw it out. This is the third time within two years that the magazine has been destroyed.

Sensational Suicide.

Ignatz Herat, arrested at Cleveland, Ohio, on a charge of grand larceny, was found hanging from his cell door at the Third Precinct Station, dead. He had taken the strap from his waist, tied one end to the upper part of the door and slowly strangled to death. Herat is believed to be the man who has broken so many windows and relieved several stores of their displays. Despondency caused by his arrest, and the deplorable condition of his family, is the cause assigned for the act.

Big Fire at Adrain.

The Masonic Temple at Adrian, Mich., built in 1865 at a cost of $85,000, was destroyed by fire. It was occupied by all the Masonic lodges in the city, who retained the third and fourth floors, the second being occupied by attorneys, and the ground floor by the Lenawee County Savings Bank, the United States Express Company and McConnell's dry goods house. The latter loses $30,000, with an insurance of $18,000. The building was insured for $20,000. Other losses will increase the aggregate considerably.

Under Sealed Orders.

The cruiser New York has sailed from the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and with the exception of a short stay somewhere near Gravesend Bay or Sandy Hook to take a pilot on board, will go direct south. Capt. Philip refused to say where the cruiser is bound for. A mail memorandum posted in a prominent place in the officers' quarters indicate very clearly that the ship was bound for Rio de Janeiro.

Lively Race War.

Cerrillos (N. M.) special: The report of a race war on the sheep ranges west of here has been confirmed. Five whites and nineteen Mexicans are reported to have been killed and further trouble is anticipated. It is expected that the Governor will send for troops to quell the trouble. The feeling on both sides is intense and much excitement prevails.

Drove a Nail Into Her Own Head.

Mrs. Frank Roadson died at Abilene, Kan., recently, having commited suicide. Last October she deliberately drove a 2-inch nail into the top of her head, pounding it down with a stone even with the scalp. She became partly paralzed but survived. The nail was discovered two days before death, and removed, but too late to save her life.

Tramps Take a Town.

A gang of fifteen tramps held up and robbed the Deputy Sheriff and two policemen, at Oskaloosa, Iowa, of all their valuables. One tramp was fatally shot, and the officers were badly bruised. The town and vicinity is badly overrun with the vagabonds. The militia has been called out to protect the town.

Disproves a Deathbed Confession.

At Sioux City, Iowa, the three men implicated by Jessie Williams in the murder of John Rohrer have been able to prove a complete alibi and the police records show that Jessie was in jail at the time Rohrer was murdered, so that her deathbed confession is a fabrication beyond any doubt.

Investigating a Peculiar Death.

John O'Rourke was killed on the Panhandle Railroad at Marion, Ind. He was lying across track when he was struck by a freight engine. There are suspicions that he had been murdered and placed on the track and an investigation is on foot.

Proves His Innocence.

At Winchester, Ohio, Sam Johnson, whom Roscoe Parker in his confession of the Ryan murders implicated as an accomplice has proved himself innocent and was released from jail.

THE YEAR'S RECORD.

A Backward Glance at the Past Twelve Months.

STORY BRIEFLY TOLD.

CHRONOLOGICAL ARRAY OF IMPORTANT EVENTS.

The Year of Our Lord Eighteen Hundred and Ninety-three Will Be Prominent in the History of the World—Its Changes, Fraught Largely with Prosperity, but Drought, Disaster, and Devastation Were Not Escaped—Concise Review of Current Events.

The year 1893 will be prominent in the history of the world until the end of time. At home it marked the existence and unexampled success of the stupendous Columbian Exposition; it ushered in so widespread a financial stringency that a panic ensued, necessitating a special session of Congress to devise means of relief, which found expression in the repeal of the Sherman law; in many parts of our land drought caused great distress to agriculturists, which in turn reacted upon commercial interests; incident to the enormous passenger traffic Chicagoward, was a series of the most horrifying railway disasters; the West and South have been swept by tremendous storms and floods, and in the latter section also pestilence has raged; the great lakes were the scene of many wrecks, with sad loss of life. A change in the administration of national affairs occurred early in the year, and in the fall elections were held which indicated a squarely opposite political drift.

Abroad, among the minor powers, the usual story of international strife is rehearsed. Even at the close of the year, Brazil and several of the Central American powers are rent with internal strife and dissension. Continental Europe has been quiet, but the year chronicles some of the most appalling disasters of the century on land and sea. The sinking of H. M. S. Victoria by the Camperdown is the most notable.

The chronological record following was not designed to include any event which had less than a general interest. A number of petty occurrences, of first interest, perhaps, to certain localities, have been omitted. But it is believed that up to date no really important event has been missed.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

SOBER OR STARTLING, FAITHFULLY RECORDED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties and General News Notes.

Condensed State News.

THE lake steamer Meeks was wrecked near Michigan City. Loss, $125,000.

THE store of John L. Moore and O. M. Gardner, at Mellott, burned. Loss, $6,000.

THERE are twenty-two inmates in the Lake County Poor House, the largest number in may years.

ABE WISHARD, a well-known horse man, committed suicide at Bono, by hanging. Cause unknown.

PETER ELLIS and wife, aged 79 and 73 respectively, died within an hour of each other near Union City.

GEORGE WEBB, freight conductor on the Wabash road, fell under the cars near Wabash, and was instantly killed.

MARK GAGE, 11 years old, fell through the ice, while skating on the Mississinewa at Marion, and was drowned.

LEE SMITH, aged 23, of Corydon, was probably fatally injured by the accidental discharge of a shotgun, the load taking effect in his face.

THE 4-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Fry, living north of Logansport, was burned to death, her clothing catching fire from an open fireplace.

BUTNER & WILSON'S hardware store and Hutchins & Fester's grocery store, Lebanon, were burglarized the other night. The safe's were blown open but only about $100 was taken.

THE Logansport Pharos says that twelve saloons will soon shut up in that city and more are to follow because of the dull times and the enforcement of the screen ordinance.

THE body of A. D. Dunbar, frozen to death, was found near the County line, west of Goshen. Dunbar was the son of a prominent South Bend family, and had been an inmate of the county asylum for imbecility.

THE Western Glass Works at Marion were destroyed by fire, throwing 175 men out of employment. The fire is supposed to have originated from a gas jet turned against a wooden wall. The loss is about $6,000, covered by insurance.

THE Pendleton glass tube and pipe works were destroyed by fire. Loss, $10,000. The company is composed largely of Indianapolis capitalists, several of the State officials being heavy stockholders. They will rebuild the plant.

THE Columbia Encaustic Tile Company of Anderson has just turned out the largest embossed enameled tile ever manufactured in the United States. The tile is 30x12 inches, and has ten figures perfectly wrought out in relief.

CY. MYERS, proprietor of the Pennsylvania Railroad Station restaurant in Logansport, for the past fifteen years, shot and killed himself with a revolver. He had accumulated a fortune of $25,000. The death of his wife two years ago and his retirement from business last spring caused despondency. He was sixty years old.

THE examination of the South Bend National Bank's books by State Bank Examiner Packard of Plymouth, has been completed. He finds that the bank lost, by the recent robbery, $15,600, or $300 less than at first stated. Cashier Myron Campbell has informed the directors that he will accept $1,000 a year less for his services in order to remunerate, as far as possible, stockholders for the loss occasioned by the robbery.

ANOTHER immense tin-plate factory and rolling mill with a capital stock of $200,000, and intending to employ 400 hands, has been located in Elwood, the papers having been signed. Col. I. L. Morris of Chicago and Edwin Stevens and Emanuel Levy of Elwood are at the head of the concern. A large iron foundry and machine shop from Bloomington, Ill., was also located there. It will employ three hundred men.

JAMES ROBINSON, an old man of 80 years, who lived, by himself, in the north part of Lafayette was last seen alive last week. Relatives went to the house the other night to see if he was in need of anything and found the octogenarian lying on the floor stark and stiff. It could not be told how long he had been dead, but the rats had been at the body, and had eaten away the ears partially, and gnawed the forehead and fingers.

AT Otwell, Pike County, several men congregated at Alexander Howey's saloon, when George Campbell and J. W. Phelps began quarreling over a love affair. Seeing that there would probably be trouble, George DeBruler, a bystander, interfered as a peacemaker and snatched a pistol from Campbell's hands as he was about to use it. This enraged Campbell, and, snatching an ice pick, he tried to dispatch DeBruler, who to save himself, fired a ball from Campbell's pistol into its owner's brain. The wound was fatal in four hours, and DeBruler is in jail charged with murder.

ANDERSON is at present overrun with a crowd of insolent tramps, who have insulted and terrorized women and children. The other day Mayor John H. Terhone ordered a tramp who had been arrested to leave the city in two minutes, and then issued instructions to the police officers that will put an end to the tramp nuisance. Turning to the Chief the Mayor said: "I want the police officers to arm themselves with rawhides and not bring any more of these men here, but go to work and whip every insolent tramp out of the city." The sentiment has met with the hearty approval of all classes.

THE Muncie society women who proposed giving a charity ball are just too angry. The church organizations do not favor a dance and the Charity Organization Society has published a card stating that it is not identified with the proposed ball.

WILLIAM N. WOLFE, a barber at Fontanet, was crushed to death under a Big Four locomotive on a coal mine branch. The engine turned over on its side at a bad place in the track and Wolfe, who was riding on it, was horribly mangled. The fireman escaped by jumping and the engineer was saved by hanging out of the cab window.

THE attorneys for Supt. A. L. Howard, of the Boone County Agricultural Association, have succeeded in having his indictment for pool-selling quashed in the court at Lebanon.

THE annual report of the school for Feebleminded, located at Fort Wayne, has been filed with the Governor. The attendance has been 27 per cent greater the past year than for 1892. There has been little sickness and few deaths, seven in all, during the year. Fifty-eight children were admitted and twenty-four discharged. There are 452 inmates now in the school. The disbursement for the maintenance was $72,705.80 and the total expenses for the year aggregated $80,903.45.

AT WAR WITH HERSELF.

The Story of a Woman's Atonement, by Charlotte M. Braeme.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Sir Bertram bent forward and tried to look in the beautiful face, but it was averted from him. Lady Charnleigh would not let him see the happiness so plainly written there.

"I wish," he said, "that you were not so wealthy, Leonie. I should have liked to prove the purity and disinterestedness of my love. I wish there were a thousand difficulties in the way, that by beating them down, one after another, I might show how dearly I love you. I would serve twice seven years for you, as Jacob did for Rachel, he loved so dearly. I would be content, sweet, to wait upon you all my life if I might call you my own in death. Oh, Leonie, say one little word to me!"

Then the lovely face bent half shyly over him.

"Do you love me so well, Bertram?" she asked, in a low voice.

"You can never know how well, sweet. I might spend my life with you—I might give to your service every moment of it—fill it with thoughts of you—know no other care or interest; and yet, when I came to die, you would not know how much I loved you. It is not given to all men to tell what they feel."

"I do not think you are very deficient in eloquence," she said, with a happy smile.

"Ah, my darling, if I were a poet, I might put my love into song—a song so beautiful, so full of divine harmony, that the world in reading it would know how I had loved you. If I were an artist I could paint you, and show to the world that form which to me is peerless. But not being either, I cannot do so. I can only tell you in plain words that I love you better than fame, fortune or life; and I plead to you, Leonie, for some little love in return."

"I am full of faults," said the girl. "I am not so perfect as you think me, Bertram. You might, perhaps, be disappointed in me after all."

"There is no fear of that; I know you have faults, but, Leonie, they are such as I cannot but love."

"You do not know what they are," she said. "I am so worldly, Bertram—I love rank, wealth, position, money, gayety, life, fashion, and those things which the wise despise. I love them, and should never be willing to live without them."

"Love me with them," said Sir Bertram, "and I shall not care; those are very venial faults, Leonie, in one so young and beautiful as you."

"I am not very patient, either," she continued; "and in me there is a great want. I can give it no name, and know no name for it; but I want something that Ethel Dacre, for instance, has in perfection. I am changeable, as the wind—grave, gay, idle, industrious, good and wicket, all in an hour."

"I can only repeat that I love your faults, Leonie. I believe they are dearer to me than the virtues of other women. But, Leonie, sweet, have you heard what I asked you? Tell me—will you care for me, will you be my wife?"

It was the question that she had heard in her dreams a thousand times.

"Will you be my wife, Leonie? My love shall shield you—my heart shelter you. Do not turn from me. Never mind those lilies—if they could speak, each leaf would urge a prayer for me. Look at me—tell me, will you be my wife?"

Her fair head drooped near him; the passion of his words had conquered her. She could make no answer.

He took her little white hands and covered them with passionate kisses. She made no resistance. She did not not draw them from him. Then, raising the face so beautiful in its softened tenderness, he kissed the white brow, his lips murmuring the while words so full of tenderness that she never forgot them.

"Say only one word, Leonie. Tell me that you love me—even ever so little. I will hope for more in time."

"I can tell you that," she whispered.

"You love me a little!" he cried.

"Yes—just in the smallest possible degree," she replied, with a smile of perfect happiness.

"And will you try really to love me more?"

"I will try," she answered. "Do you think the lesson will be a hard one to learn, Bertram?"

He kissed the fair hands again, telling her she was as peerless as a queen. She tried to hide the happiness that surged through heart and brain, thinking that it was not maidenly for her lover to see how well he was loved.

"My head is not a very firm one," she said, suddenly, looking up at him.

"It is a very beautiful one," he put in, drawing the blushing face nearer to his own.

"You have interrupted me, Bertram. I repeat, my head is not very firm—my brain will not hold many ideas at once. Just now it is filled with thoughts of the ball and several other things. Bertram," she continued, slowly, "ask me these questions again when the ball is over, and I will give you an answer."

He looked at her in a rapture of hope.

"My darling," he cried, "how good you are to me! Oh, Leonie, shall I win you after all? The very hope dazzles me. If you sent me from you I should——"

"What should you do?" she asked, anxiously.

"Not kill myself," he replied, slowly. "Death is a coward's resource. But from my life every gleam of brightness would die out. I should go far away, darling, from home and friends, to some strange far-off land, where nothing could remind me of you. I should lose everything that makes life dear in losing you. And no face ever charmed me save yours. You hear how sweetly the birds are singing; there is more music to me in one word of yours than in all their song. See how fair the lilies are; there is more beauty to me in this one white hand of yours than in all the flowers that ever bloomed. Your face to me shines more brightly than all the stars in heaven. I believe that if I died it would be found on my heart."

The impulse was strong upon her to tell him that she loved him just as dearly—that he was all the world to her, the soul and center of her being—but some strange instinct made her refrain.

"A fortress that is easily stormed is never considered a great conquest," she said to herself. "Bertram must ask me again and again—he will love me all the better in the end."

"After the ball, remember," said Sir Bertram: "Leonie, I shall count the hours until it is over, and yet I cannot help hoping. You are too good to torture me; if you meant to send me from you, you would do so at once. You are too good and generous to be cruel."

She looked at him with a smile. How little he knew, how little he guessed that he was the very sun of her existence—that if anything could surpass his love for her, it was her love for him.

"See," she said, suddenly, "the lily-cups are closing, and the dew is beginning to fell. Bertram, we must go in."

"I wonder," he said, slowly, "how I shall live through these hours. I could hardly do so but that I believe in the end you will be my wife. When is the ball to take place, Leonie?"

"On Tuesday week—Tuesday, the nineteenth of June."

"I shall remember the date: that ball has suddenly become most important to me."

Another hour passed before they walked back over the fallen rose-leaves to the house, and then there was little doubt left on Sir Bertram's mind that Leonie would eventually become his wife.

"She is so beautiful, so peerless, so eagerly sought after, I could not expect her to say 'yes' all at once, but I know she loves me—she would have sent me from her if she did not."

"Remember," said Lady Charnleigh, as they drew near the long open window, "you are not to speak of this, Bertram, until——"

"Until your brain is clear and the ball is over. I will remember," he promised, with a smile. "You like to entertain one idea at a time, Leonie, and no more."

"You understand perfectly. See, there is Lady Fanshawe. Have you any idea, Bertram, whether it is etiquette for a countess of eighteen to linger among the lilies with a Saxon prince?"

It was the first time she had ever flattered him, and the fair, frank face flushed hotly.

"For your sake I wish I were a prince," he said.

She looked at him with an assumption of perfect gravity.

"You please me best as you are," she returned, and when he would have caught that white jeweled hand she turned away.

"My dear Lady Charnleigh," said Lady Fanshawe; "do you not think it is late for you to be out?"

"Please blame Sir Bertram, auntie—he has beguiled the time."

Lady Fanshawe looked keenly at that gentleman's face.

"Has he anything to tell me?" she said to herself. "No, he looks exceedingly happy, but not as though she had promised to marry him. Whom does she like best, I wonder?"

Miss Dacre looked up from her book as Sir Bertram re-entered the room; Lady Charnleigh had lingered outside, pretending to fasten some drooping roses, but in reality to hide the beautiful blushes that had not yet died from her face.

"He has not asked her to marry him," thought Miss Dacre; "he looks like a happy lover, but nothing more." A sharp sudden pang smote her. "Does she like Paul Flemyng best? If so, he will win her."

She laid down her book and went out to where the young countess stood raising the drooping flowers.

"How sad it is that roses die!" commented Lady Charnleigh. "Look at those lovely leaves, Ethel; they ought never to fade."

But Ethel Dacre went up to her and clasped her white neck.

"Leonie," she said, "you are not really thinking about the roses. Tell me, have you been kind to Sir Bertram this evening."

The countess opened wide her lovely eyes.

"My dearest child child," she said, "have you been with me so long without learning to understand me. I am kind to no one but myself."

Nor could Ethel get any other answer from her.

CHAPTER XXV.

Perhaps the time that elapsed between that night and the nineteenth of June was really the happiest part of Lady Charnleigh's life. She was sure of her lover's affection; she had but to speak one word to him, and the happiness of her whole existence was secured. He loved her; he had prayed her to be his wife. She had but to consent.

"I will make him so happy," she said to herself with a smile. "I will make him wait a few days longer, and then I will tell him how dearly and truly I have always loved him. I have teased him enough; I will submit for the future."

She was standing in her favorite spot, the western terrace, where purple passion-flowers grew in luxuriant profusion; leaning over the stone balustrade round which climbing roses and sweet woodbines clung, there came to her a dream—a dream of the day when to this home she loved so dearly her lover should come, of the long vista of happy years stretching out in the golden sunlight, of the future to be spent together, of the love that should end only with life."

"We shall be buried together," she said to herself; "we shall lie side by side in the last long sleep, in the green churchyard at Weildon, with flowers blooming over us. Neither in life nor in death shall I lose my love."

Tears filled her bright eyes as she raised them to the cloudless sky.

I ought to thank heaven," she said, "that has made me so wondrously happy. I ought to be good, for my path in life lies among bright flowers which have no thorns."

And the memory of this dream lingered always with her. She caught herself later on looking round her magnificent rooms, and wondering which should be Sir Bertram's study, wondering which he would like best, valuing her possessions ten thousand times more, now that they would be his also. She found herself always thinking of this future that was to be shared with him.

"When the limes are in flower next year," she said, "he will be here with me."

So with everything. She had but one date—"when he would be with her." She said nothing to Ethel, her chosen friend, of her love. Lady Charnleigh was full of life, animation, and spirits, but she was not one to speak of her deepest feelings; they were kept sacred. She rather avoided than sought conversation about Sir Bertram.

Lady Fanshawe and Miss Dacre were puzzled. Whom did she like the better? Which did she prefer?—le beau sabreur or Sir Bertram. That neither could solve the mystery satisfactorily was something to the credit of the Countess of Charnleigh.

"Of course, in one way," said Lady Fanshawe, pensively, "a marriage with Captain Flemyng would be very suitable—it would seem only fair that he should share the inheritance; but, looking at the matter from a sensible point of view, it would be a great pity. With her beauty and wealth, she might do so much better."

Hearing which, Ethel Dacre's face flushed, and she felt much inclined to make an angry reply. She contented herself with saying:

"Neither money nor title could ennoble such a man as Paul Flemyng;" and then Miss Dacre sailed with great dignity from the room, Lady Fanshawe looking after her with very widely opened eyes.

The nineteenth of June came at last, and found Crown Leighton in a state of delightful confusion. The illumination and decoration of the grounds were completed, but the interior of the mansion was at present in "magnificent disarray." Lady Fanshawe was much amused. It was quite early in the morning when Sir Bertram rode over, bringing with him a magnificent bouquet of flowers for Lady Charnleigh.

"I know I must not detain you now, Leonie, but remember, sweet, what you have promised me when the ball is over. I shall be jealous to-night if you dance with any one but myself."

"A little jealousy does most men good," said his lady-love, as she hastened away.

Sir Bertram rode off again. It was useless to remain at Crown Leighton: as he could not talk to its beautiful mistress, he was quite as well away. He had not been gone long before Captain Flemyng arrived and sent to request five minutes with Lady Charnleigh.

"I am afraid, Leonie," said Lady Fanshawe, "that you find so many lovers embarrassing."

"No one said anything about lovers, auntie. I presume gentlemen may call on business without being suspected of wishing to make love." And the Countess of Charnleigh walked out of the room with her head proudly erect. Lady Fanshawe's remarks were rather trying.

Captain Flemyng was in the morning-room, looking very handsome. Leonie's quick eyes discovered some trace of emotion on the high-bred patrician face. His errand was much the same as his predecessor's; he had brought two superb bouquets, one for Lady Charnleigh, and one in no way inferior for Miss Dacre.

"I have something to say to you, Lady Charnleigh," began Paul. "I know that I must not detain you now, but, when all this is over, you will grant me an interview? All my future depends upon it." His face flushed, and his eyes were full of suppressed fire. He took one of her hands in his. "I will not detain you, Leonie; but the hours will be full of painful suspense until I see you again and have your answer."

She liked him so well that long after he had gone away she stood with tears in her eyes, knowing the pain she must inflict on him.

"I would have done anything to prevent this," she said. "I have robbed him of his inheritance, and now I must rob him of his peace and happiness. Oh, Paul, you should hate me!"

She liked him so well that, although it was the day of her magnificent ball, she wept bitterly for the sorrow that must be his.

"If he had only liked me as I like him," she said—"in kindly, sisterly way, without any of this tiresome love! If he had only loved Ethel, who is worth a dozen of me! He will not reproach me, but he will go away from me looking so sad and so wretched that I shall never feel quite happy again—he whose love might honor a queen."

She was obliged perforce to dismiss thoughts of him, for servants and assistants required her superintendence. She was wanted in twenty places at once.

It was not until the hour came for dressing that it occured to her that she was in a sad dilemma over the two bouquets. Which must she carry?

"I will take a few flowers from both," she said, with a smile, "and then I shall avoid any tragical denouement for this evening at least."

HORRIBLE CRUELTY.

The "Smelling-Out" Ceremony of the Zulus of South Africa.

"Smelling-out" is one of the customs among the Zulus of South Africa and is practiced in the Matabele nation, now at war with the English. This is the course of "smelling out:" Somebody dies, or perhaps the King or one of his wives suffers from mysterious pains, or a child is born deformed, or a murrain breaks out among the royal oxen. The witch doctors and doctresses are consulted and declare the evil to be the work of an "umtagati" or wizard. Then they proceed to name the wizard, who, by art magic, has contrived the ill in question, and who, oddly enough, very often happens to be a man rich in cattle, of whom the King or chief is anxious to be rid.

The circle is formed, the doctors and doctresses, bedizened in skins and bones, go through their antics and ceremonies, calling on the shades of their forefathers and consulting the spirits by means of bones, which they throw like dice till at length the name of the guilty person is miraculously revealed to them. Perhaps he is sitting there in the circle before them safe in his innocence and believing himself to be a trusted servant and soldier of the King when the isanusi creeps up to him touches him with the fateful wand, denouncing him as the man whose spirit thought the evil thing.

From the touch of that wand there is no appeal, and for the most part the victim dies within the hour. He is led away and his neck is twisted, or his brains dashed out, and his name becomes a reproach. That same day also the King's slayers start for the kraal of the murdered man, where he may have five or six wives and fifteen or twenty children, together with dependents and slaves. At night, when folk sleep heavily, they surround it and set it on fire. The victims rush out to fail upon the assegai or be cast back living into the flames. And so with the death of all ends the very common tragedy of a "smelling-out."

Millions of Dollars Sent to China.

Congressman Hilborn, of California, delivered his maiden speech at Washington last week on the subject of the Chinese in this country. All the money they make here, he said, they send back to China. Since their first settlement in California, from that State alone they have sent $300,000,000. "In 1880," said Mr. Hilborn, "the total Chinese population of the United States was 105,465; in California it was 75,132. In 1890 the total population was 107,475, showing a total gain of population in the United States of 2,010. The Chinese population in California is 72,724, showing a falling off in our particular State. They seem to have turned their faces eastward. In New York in 1870 there were only 29 Chinamen; in 1880, 909; in 1890, 2,935. In Pennsylvania in 1870 there were 13; in 1880, 148; in 1890, 1,146.

Victoria Has Fifty-five Pet Dogs.

The greatest private collection of pet dogs in the world is said to be that of her Majesty Queen Victoria of Great Britain. The Queen has fifty-five canine pets, and they live in the grandest canine style that ever was known. Their dining-room is handsomely carpeted, and ornamented with the portraits of their celebrated ancestors in oil and water colors. Some of the pictures are adorned with tufts of the hair which belonged to the departed pets of her Majesty. The dogs are proud of their portrait gallery, and they despise all the low-bred curs of creation. One of the Queen's pleasures is to make sketches and paint portraits of her dogs, and many of the pictures in her canine pantheon are from her hand. Others have been made by Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Louise of Lorne.

LIVING IN NEW YORK.

What Fashionable Dwellers There Pay for Their Establishments.

Several wealthy New-Yorkers have been lately interviewed as to the cost of living in their city. Their replies do not include the cost of food and clothing, for these expenses are rather the least that a fashionable New-Yorker has to meet. "A gentleman of a fair family," said one of these men, "to be in the social swim, if he owns his own house, can live handsomely on $50,000 a year, and can spend double that amount without any appreciable difference. In the latter case he has more servants and gives more receptions. For $50,000 a year he can live just as comfortably in this city as he could live quietly in some interior village for $5,000 a year. In the village he would doubtless enjoy better health.

"The servants are important. There must be a butler, with one or two assistants; a chef, with assistants; a lady's maid for each female member of the family; two laundresses, at least two chambermaids, a governess for the children, a coachman, a footman, tutors for languages and music, and two stablemen.

"The wine and cigar bill of course varies according to circumstances. Wine is not used so much now as it was a short time ago, and fewer gentlemen smoke; still, there must always be the best wines and cigars in the house. The church pew costs from $300 to $500, and the opera box costs $5,000 for the season. The newspaper bill is unusually large—in the newspaper bill I include, of course, magazines and all periodical literature. Most men of affairs take all the principal newspapers of the city, even if they have time only to glance at the headings. They must know what is going on.

"For receptions, a prima donna costs from $500 to $1,000 a night. I say nothing about the stables, because a man may keep two horses or twenty or none without affecting his social standing; $50,000 a year is a fair estimate for a proper establishment. The expense need not go much higher and cannot go much lower."

The next wealthy New-Yorker to whom the question was put protested that his own experience could not be used as an example, for he lived in a very moderate and quiet way—very moderate, indeed, his expenses rarely exceeding $25,000 a year.

"But I have plenty of friends who live in better style," he said. "Anywhere between $50,000 and $100,000 a year I consider a moderate expense for a wealthy family. For a moderate-sized house the rent may be estimated at $2,500, and that is very low for New York. There must be a man or woman servant for each of the children, at $30 to $40 a month; a butler at from $100 to $200 a month; a chief cook at about $140 a month. You see I am making the whole thing moderate. You can pay your chef $8,000 a year, like one of the Vanderbilts, if you choose. An under-cook at $75 a month, two kitchen girls at about $20 a month each; a governess, $40; two chambermaids, $20 each; coachman, about $80; groom, $40 to $50; stable boy, $20; two or more valets at $30 each; a lady's maid for each woman or girl, at $30 each; two women for the laundry, at $25 each; two gardeners, if there are any grounds, one at $60 and the other at $30 a month; two door boys at $20 each, and a boy for blacking shoes.

"Then there will be from six to twelve horses, with their feed, and anywhere from two to twelve carriages to keep in order. On this scale, which is a moderate one for a family in New York, you cannot estimate less than $75,000 a year, and $100,000 is safer."

CHURCH-GOING IN HAWAII.

Adult Worshipers Smoking Pipes or Sleeping and Girls Enjoying Their Cigars.

Sunday at the great church, not a chimney to relieve its barn outline, says a correspondent of the Boston Transcript. A little girl sits at the entrance smoking a cigar. This entrance is as floorless as if at a circus; the sexton, a Chinaman all joints, is pulling at the church bell. As worshipers enter, the bell-puller stops to talk with those who come in, until all sound ceases and we enter. The plastered walls inclose a large area. Here is a family in a roomy pew near the door—four children with the mother and father. As the service progresses the children must be amused; a loaf of bread is produced, and while the mother nurses the baby she cuts three slices from the loaf and adds these to the spiritual food which is offered her restless young ones from the pulpit.

Directly below the preacher two old women are seated sideways, confronting each other, their arms firmly clasping the knees. Each smokes a pipe; as they smoke they nod and yawn. From the congregation loud snores are occasionally heard; two little boys, close by the preacher, skirmish with umbrellas. One of the boys is driven to the wall; the father of the defeated comes from the body of the church and roughly drives away the boy who has discomfited his child. Young men and women stroll down the aisles, or step over the backs of seats to get drinks, sometimes returning with a mug or calabash of water for a friend. A horse thrusts his head through a window and looks quietly upon the audience. However, in spite of these events the main portion of the large assemblage seems undisturbed; the mother with four children produces a rattle, a dernier resort, to quiet the baby. A woman is seized with headache, she loosens her hair and signals a friend, who crosses to her in beeline, bestriding the backs of the seats, and kneads the muscles of her head in native fashion (lomi lomi). Pausing in his part (he is, by the way, the only tenor voice in the choir), a young man takes from his pocket a little mirror and a comb, carefully arranges his necktie and combs his hair, standing in full view.

"Look!" cries the preacher, on tiptoe, and with vigorous gestures, "look at the sea, look at that old hill, there are enough raw fish and taro, while you are complaining of famine! Why doesn't the Lord bring you calabashes full? Oh, you are too lazy! 'Go to the ant,'" etc. Turning to me, the only stranger present, he translates this part of the sermon, the interruption being received with equanimity by the people. Suddenly descending he borrows a cap which he holds toward each person in the audience, not excepting his own family, for money or a written promise to bring it next Sabbath and enters into a discussion of pros and contras, when his parishioners object to giving. The delinquents blush and stammer with native grace a few young men who attempt to slip away from their obligation are checked by a brisk turn of the minister's spectacles; he forces back change upon such as give beyond his approval; the little ones who have brought a kaneta are praised and thanked. As a father guiding his children this good man lives in their confidence and love.

RESIDED IN A CAB.

How an Eccentric German Did the Sights of His Country's Capital.

Professor Heinrich Brugsch, of the University of Berlin, the most distinguished living egyptologist, is publishing "My Life and Wanderings," which are interesting, not only on account of the revelation of the author's personality and the reminiscences of celebrated scientists of the earlier half of this century which they contain, but also by the anecdotes which the great savant has a happy faculty of relating. One of them, quoted by the Philadelphia Ledger, may furnish a hint to some of our own "globe trotters." On Professor Brugsch's first visit to Alexandria he lodged with an original by the name of Bauernhorst, by birth a Mecklenburger, and a man of gigantic strength and stature, who combined the office of Prussian Vice Consul with the conduct of a wine shop. He was generally known by the sobriquet of "Father Langfeld." He rendered important service in many ways, and Professor Brugsch made him promise that if ever he came to Berlin again he would visit him.

Some years afterward Father Langfeld appeared one morning at the Professor's rooms in Berlin. After the customary greetings Professor Brugsch inquired;

"Where are you staying, Father Langfeld?"

"Here, below."

"What! In the same house with me? That' a curious coincidence."

"Not at all. In a cab."

"Ah, you have just come from the station and are looking for a hotel?"

"On the contrary; lived in the cab since yesterday."

"What in the name of common sense do you mean? And your luggage?"

"Carry it with me;" and with his fat right hand he patted a small bag slung on his shoulder by a green strap. "Here are brush, comb, soap, and money."

"But please explain yourself more clearly; I don't understand at all."

"Not much to explain. Live day and night in the cab; sleep perhaps a couple of hours in the stable, covered with a horse blanket. Summer, you know! Cabman shows me everything worth seeing—intelligent fellow—spares me the expense of a valet de place. Eat and drink well, see everything, hear everything, know everything. Cab stops, I get out, receive instructions, and explore; cabman waits till I get back. If I need linen or anything, buy it; cabman gets all that I cast off. Quite content. No extra luggage to pay for, no hotel bills, no tips, no bundles, no questions; everything all right. Stay three days longer. Now, Herr Doctor, put on your coat and visit me in my hotel. Let the cabman drive us whither he will. Very convenient!"

Father Langfeld had already "done" Trieste, Vienna, and Prague in the same fashion, and firmly believed it was the only way to see the world. He subsequently applied his system with equal success to Paris and London. It has merits; whether they are not more than counterbalanced by its disadvantages each individual must determine for himself.

The Feminine Editor in Japan.

The Japanese Gazette, a Yokohama paper lately edited by a lady now displaced by change of proprietorship, has a farewell editorial from her pen which gives an amusing idea of journalistic amenities in Yokohama. "It has been urged more than once," the lady writes, "that under the present editorship it has been impossible for our contemporaries to write freely. But when we recall the fact that we have been termed a liar and a virago, likened to a senseless creature who pokes the fire from the top, stigmatized as an impostor, an irate female, a female fibber, and alluded to in a variety of other amicable ways, we are tempted to wonder to what limits journalistic freedom aspires to soar." In another column the retiring editress supplements her leading article by a poem addressed to "My Editorial Chair," in the course of which she hints that her sex is the real ground for her enforced departure:

> I leave thee not with vain regret,
> Nor yet with vow to thee forget;
> A man, I might have filled thee yet,
> My Editorial Chair!

Two Rose Trees.

At Cologne there is a rose tree which is believed to be 300 years old and has a trunk of four feet in circumference. California has one at Ventura which is now three feet in circumference at the ground. It was only planted in 1876 and now covers 2,000 feet.

BISMARCK'S private physician, Dr. Schwenninger, has written an article in which he severely criticises and condemns various modern fads, such as vegetarianism, the all-wool and all-cotton doctrines, the Kneipp cure, and the "Schwenninger cure." He explains that the "cure" named after him is "in every sense a clever swindle;" that it is a misleading generalization of methods and practices which he does indeed recommend in individual cases, but does not consider adapted to different persons without important individual variations.

Testimonial.

When Mrs. J. H. St. Clair, of Hawley, Kansas, was back a year or two ago, she bought a Swing Washer of Mr. Meese. This last summer Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pommert, of this place, spent part of the summer with Mr. St. Clair's family, Mr. S., being a brother of Mrs. Pommert. The two ladies used the washing machine, and Mrs. Pommert became as enthusiastic over it, as was Mrs. St. Clair, and on her return to Auburn, she got one of her own, and uses it each week. Both ladies agree that it does its work quicker, better and is much pleasanter to work with, than any other machine. As it is closed, the steam does not escape to drench the walls, or to heat up the person, making it more pleasant to hang out the clothes. Both ladies authorize us to say that no washer they ever tried is equal to the Auburn Swing Washer. It is easy to operate and does its work quickly.

Court.

J. E Rose was made judge last week to run court, as Judge Powers was obliged to continue the case at Angola between our commissioners and the foundry. Mr. Rose knows how to take hold, and is not afraid to do it. He disposed of a good deal of work, though he began on Thursday. One of the most important things he did was to enter an order requiring the county clerk to take all the papers published in the county, keep them on file and have them bound, and so made a part of the archives of the office. This is what should have been done many years ago. Up to this date only the Courier and the Waterloo Press have been bound and kept by the county, and this is done by the recorder. These two papers were at one time the only ones we had and are still the most important to be kept if only two are to be preserved. But several other papers are now in existence in the county, and each one has in it something that should be preserved. The new arrangement goes into effect Jan. 1, 1894, beginning with vol. 24 of the Courier.

The case of Jones vs. Grand Rapids railroad is being tried before Judge Rose. They have a struck jury, taken from the following names: Daniel Lochemier, Robert N. Gouser, Wm. Eckert, John H. Elson, Wm. E. Sherlock, Phineas Childs, Wm. Pepple, David Goodrich, Solomon Reinoehl, James L. Smith, John F. Harter, David Butler, Perry Long, Ed. S. Wise, Abram Sherck.

George R. Lawrence.

The subject of this, was born in Philadelphia county, Pa, Dec. 21, 1817, and died in Auburn, Dec 23, 1893, aged 76 years and two days. He was married to Angeline Lightcap in 1844, and to them were born three children, two of whom survive him. In 1860 he moved to a farm two and a half miles west of Auburn, and three years later to Auburn. In 1881 he moved to Garrett, and worked in the B. & O. car shops about 11 years, when he was retired with an allowance the company makes for faithful service. After the death of his wife about three years ago, he came to reside here with his son Don. E. Lawrence, where he has since had his home. He was a member of the Baptist Church. The funeral was Dec. 26, conducted by Rev. J. D. Brosy.

Christmas and Birthday.

B. F. Moffit, at Jackson Center, was surprised on Monday, even if it did take a little headwork to do it. Simeon Maurer called on him and asked him to go over and see their friend, Henry Landorfer, who is quite sick. B. F. was kept there as long as possible, and on getting home at 11:30, he found his fine home filled with relatives and friends. There were some fine presents, including a fine sofa, as it was his 53d birthday. Among those attending were Mr. M.'s mother, Mrs. Brown, Mr. Simeon Maurer, Joseph Hartman; Mrs. Moffit's mother, Mrs. Maurer; Orange Herrick, S J. Andress, Cyrus Maurer, the gentlemen bringing their wives and children. It was a glad time for all.

SANTA FE railroad system owes 350 millions. Will soon go into hands of a receiver.

SOUTH WHITELY had a big fire last week that destroyed the Creamery Package factory. Loss about $30,000, and many hands thrown out of work.

FIRST counterfeit money ever made of the new metal, aluminum, now offering. They are dimes that look like genuine, but their lightness gives them away.

SURPRISING as it may seem there is now and then a benighted republican editor who claims that the foreigner pays the tariff duty. Common people know better.

MOONSHINERS in Ohio it seems. Several of these illicit whiskey makers left their wild haunts and came to Latty, O., last week, got drunk and fought, two being killed.

BLAINE gets no monument yet. His old home, Augusta, Maine, started in last spring to raise $10,000 to $20,000 They have only $115 subscribed so far. Blaine was wealthy; let his heirs put up the monument.

UTAH is to be admitted with a clause in the constititution, that says polygamy shall be forever excluded and that this clause in the state constitution shall not be changed except by the consent of the United States. That settles the old Mormon question forever.

THERE are thousands of idle men in Chicago, complaining that they cannot get work. Yet the contractors who are tearing down the buildings of the world's fair, say they cannot get men for $1.25 a day. It seems that some do not want work if they can be fed without.

CHICAGO elected a mayor last Tuesday, to take the place of Carter Harrison who was murdered. The Democrats carried the city ticket by 1141, electing John P. Hopkins over Swift. It was a hot fight, and nearly as many votes were polled as when Cleveland was elected. He carried the city by 34,000.

Big Hearted Citizens.

Aid to the worthy poor must be provided for this hard winter, in these hard times. Several of our citizens have talked over the matter of making some provisions for assisting those most in need, but it took no definite shape till last week. The first distinct proposition came from James Draggoo, and this finally developed into a plan that will do much good, and do it in a way that will count. Mr. Draggoo made an offer that he would furnish fifty bushels of wheat if someone would see that it was ground into flour. Mr. Bachtel of the Eagle Mills offered to grind the wheat for half toll; Mr. Hilt of the Auburn Mills at the south end of town made the same offer. It was finally arranged that Mr. Hilt should grind the wheat at half rate, and Albert Robbins of the Farmers Bank agreed to pay the other half. So it was settled that the worthy poor among us would soon have 2,000 pounds of flour to draw from. This flour will be ready by Jan. 1, and will be left at the hardware store of Brown, Culbertson & Boland, where those entitled to it can get such quantities as they may stand in pressing need of, till it is exhausted. We call this practical charity, and cannot too highly commend the liberal hearted men who are doing it. It will not be amiss, we trust, a little word or so, right here, while the subject is fresh We have heard several citizens of Auburn complain that Mr. Draggoo was close-fisted, etc., etc., and not progressive or liberal in the use of his means, of which it is claimed he has a considerable amount. But we should not forget several things he has done. Look at the wild waste that a few years ago could be seen south of the jail, all of which is now a fine row of two story brick buildings, much of it due to Mr. Draggoo, whose fine block, with Mr. Sheets' block to the east, make that as substantial a set of business rooms as we have. We have known other things Mr. Draggoo has done, for which he should have credit. But these things are private property, and we do not care to say more. But would it not be well for us all to consider more carefully the rash opinions we too often express in regard to our neighbors.

Preferred Auburn Turkeys.

Many Auburn people came back from various parts of the country—from school, from new homes, and from various employments—to take part in the Christmas feasts at the old firesides. Among those we can remember are, Oscar Hoffman from Purdue, Walter Hartman and Julia Hodge from Ann Arbor, Lucy Otto from Indianapolis where she is a clerk in the pension office, Olive Nelson from Huntington where she is teaching, Walter Penfield from school at Lima, Ind., Phil Gibson from school at Fayette, O, Stella Merica from her music studies at Chicago, Willie Campbell and his employer I. N. Cool and wife from Logansport, Claude Benedict from Chicago, Will Swarts from Ft. Wayne, Ira Thrush and Frank Crew, and many whose names we could not get.

Notice.

All persons knowing themselves to be indebted to J. N. Wilson & Son, either Waterloo or Auburn account will please call and settle AT ONCE. All Acct's over four months old will be left for collection if not paid prior to Jan. 15, 1894.

Closure in the First Senate.

From Harper's Weekly.

The United States Senate is now the only important legislative body in the world that has no closure rule; in the Senate alone can a minority theoretically talk a measure to death. The House of Lords is not an exception, for its power to defeat a bill, whether by direct vote or by inaction, is reducible to nil by a determined Commons. But the Senate's right to defeat legislation is very real, and in the senate the minority's power to prevent legislation is very positively declared and not infrequently exercised.

And during the trying struggle of last summer a large number of Senators, including nearly all the older members, declared against the adoption of a rule providing for the previous question, and the shrewdest and best-informed observers at Washington believe the adoption of such a rule impossible The reasons given are practically all contained in the undoubted fact that Senatorial tradition is respected, and to a certain extent respectable. Senatorial tradition, it is held, forbids the adoption of a closure rule, prohibits any action by a majority of the Senate looking to its adoption, so long as a minority or a member desires to speak against it, and especially makes it impossible for the Vice-President to put any question to a vote without the consent of every Senator present.

This Senatorial tradition is held, of course, to be as old as the Senate, just as our constitutional law is largely derived from the opinions of the framers of the Constitution, Americans have a respect for the "framers" second only to their respect for the "signers" of the Declaration. Senators share in this with their fellow citizens, and for "framers," who also became Senators, their respect approaches veneration.

In the Senate of the first Congress of the United States sat nine men who had been "framers," had signed their names to the original draught of the Constitution; they comprised more than one-third of the Senate from April 1789 to March, 1791. Here, if anywhere, we shall find a firm basis for Senatorial tradition, and the proper interpretation of the Constitution so far as it relates to the rights and duties of the Senate.

The whole case against a closure rule, if it depends upon tradition, falls to the ground when we discover that such a rule existed and was repeatedly made use of in the first Senate. It reads as follows:

Rule 7.—In case of a debate becoming tedious, four Senators may call for the question; or the same number may at any time move for the previous question, viz.. "Shall the main question now be put?"

This is closure, pure and simple. Four Senators—less than one-sixth of the whole number, and less than one-third of a quorum—had power to demand an instant vote as to whether the question before the Senate should be put to a vote forthwith; if a majority so wished, the question was voted on and disposed of at once, without further debate.

To Societies, Churches, Etc.

Notices of churches, meetings, socials, and similar gatherings will hereafter be made in the Courier under a separate head; notices not to exceed five lines will be inserted free. If more space is desired, the regular rate of five cents a line will be charged. We believe, however, that a small notice placed under the proper head, will be as good for all purposes, as several notices of greater or less length scattered over the paper Our object is to save room, as it has often happened that good reading matter has been crowded out, by the demand for space for free notices.

Obituaries, cards of thanks, etc., should be made reasonably short, for if several are in the paper at the same time, it is impossible to get in a proper amount of reading matter. There should be no poetry added, not more than one verse. Poetry with an obituary is now out of date. The only way poetry is allowable is to have a verse or two in the body of the article, and even this is seldom seen now.

Christmas at the Churches.

Several of our churches had entertainments more or less elaborate Monday evening. Perhaps the greatest attendance was at the M. E. Church, where the novelty of a "Ferris Wheel" on which the presents were displayed, formed a unique feature. At the Presbyterian Church, the gifts were displayed on a "ladder" that was trimmed and ornamented, and while it did not present a very imposing appearance, it managed to hold a vast amount of those timely articles so dear to the juvenile heart at Christmas, and without which this popular holiday would lose much of its attraction for the little ones. The evening was devoted to literary exercises, all of which were fine and very entertaining, for the little ones have cute ways of saying and doing their parts on such occasions. We have not space, to name them all, and have no list of the names, but one or two, should have extra mention on account of the difficulty work they did so well. Little Aileen Garwood sang a piece which few of the older ones present could have mastered in a week, and she sang it well. Pearl Kelley had a recitation full of variety, action and expression, which she did with much ease and grace, and both these girls were roundly cheered. Among the others, we can recall but a part of the names, for they were many, and all were so bright. There were Mabel and Vera Zerwes, Edie Trout, Johnnie Leas, Hubert Hartman, Mabel, Ruth and Bessie Baker, George Emanuel, Leah Little, Laura Rose, little Miss Snell, Master and Miss Armstrong, Blanche Potter, Pearl Sprott, Maude Sawyer, Bessie Keeran, Braddie Ralston and Blaine Otto. Two very fine exercies shou'd also be noticed. George Kennedy, of Waterloo, and Walter Hartman, of this place, sang a duet, which Mr. Kennedy accompanied by the guitar, of which he is a skilled player Mr. Kennedy later, gave a solo, on the guitar, and in both cases there was hearty applause, and efforts to "call 'em back." After the speaking came the gifts, and these, as advised in the Courier, were confined strictly to the Sunday school. The gifts were unusually nice and very appropriate. No one was overlooked or forgotten, and some even who were not members, received of their friendly bounty. Dr. Johnston, the superintendent, turned the management over to Clara Otto, who presided with dignity and grace. They were led in prayer by Miss Flora Hoffman, who also was organist. Taken altogether, this was one of the most pleasant and satisfactory Christmas entertainments the school has had.

Resolutions of Respect.

CASTLE HALL,
CORRUNNA LODGE, No. 248, K. of P.,
Corrunna, Ind., Dec. 24, '93.

Your committee to whom was referred the preparation of resolutions of respect to the memory of our beloved Brother Newton K Miller, who departed this life December 8, 1893, respectfully submit the following:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Supreme Ruler of the universe to call from our lodge our esteemed brother, Newton K. Miller, therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we can but bow in humble submission to the decree of the Divine Master, we feel that in the death of Brother Miller the Lodge has lost one of its most influential members and the community in which he lived a good citizen. Brother Miller while among us was always known as an honest, upright and industrious young man.

Resolved, That while our hearts are filled with sorrow, we realize that our loss is his gain, and that he has but preceded us to that land beyond the grave, where we will all join in one Grand Lodge ruled over by the Grand Master of the universe.

Resolved, That to the bereaved wife, mother, brothers and sister we tender our heart felt sympathies in this their hour of sorrow, and commend them to Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to any who may have aided in the care of Bro. Miller during his sickness; also to the Lagrange I O O. F. Lodge and the Lagrange K. of P. Lodge for their assistance in the burial of our deceased brother.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect, the charter of this lodge be draped in mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be given to the bereaved wife, and that they be spread upon the records of this lodge, and that a copy be sent to each of the following papers: The Lagrange Standard, Lagrange, Ind., the Kendallville Standard, Kendallville, Ind., Auburn Courier, Auburn, Ind., and the Waterloo Press, Waterloo, Ind.

ALBUMS

Cheap. Just the thing to keep those extra photos from getting soiled and lost. Think of it! A sixty cabinet album for 50 cents.

DAVENPORT, THE DRUGGIST.

Rev. Charles Oswald preached two able discourses at the Presbyterian church Sunday. He is still in the theological college, but is rapidly developing fine ability as a speaker. We predict for him a brilliant future in the ministry, the field he has chosen.

Lovely windows were shown in several stores in town, to display holiday goods. The most complete and beautiful was at Harter's, but Kiblinger's, Schaab Brothers and their Furniture store, Brown, Culbertson & Boland, Union Bakery, Hoff's Home Restaurant and others were very fine.

MARRIED.—At the residence of the bride's parents in Auburn, Dec. 24, 1893, Mr. F. E Lane and Miss Cora Spitler, Elder S. B. Wood officiating. The bride and groom are well known and popular young people. The COURIER wishes them the highest degree of happiness and prosperity.

Herbie Martin, son of J. J. Martin, of Albion, came over Tuesday for a visit with his relatives, the COURIER folks. He is grown so, that few of his childhood friends would know him. He and his cousin, Pearl Kelley, went yesterday from here to Columbia City and South Whitley to visit the relatives there.

Chas. L. Thomas, at Omaha, sent another Christmas gift which was also accompanied by the friendly compliments of the season. It may interest his many DeKalb friends to know that he is a member of the city council. He does not say so, but it is true however. As we often say, it is the nature of the De Kalb boy.

John Lumm, section foreman on the Wabash from here to LaOtto, was in Saturday. He brings word that his brother, Mike Lumm, who has for some years been section foreman from here to Moore's Station, has been promoted and is now road master, having charge of the track and sections from Montpelier to Peru, and from Chili to Logansport. It takes the Auburn boy to "get there." We are glad to hear of Mr. Lumm's good fortune.

George Cosper, of Brimfield, a brother of J. R. Cosper, of Auburn, died last week.

Holiday trade seemed to run largely to useful articles, if we except several tons of candy.

Mr. and Mrs. Porter, of Crestline, O., were visiting in the family of C. Ashleman last week.

Nice white roses and primroses for sale at Fleming's green-house, all suitable for holiday flowers.

Mrs. Charles Shoup, of Lucas county, Ohio, is visiting the family of D. C. Marvin, who are relatives.

See! see! see! the grand display of fresh candies at Thomas Bros.' candy factory south of public square.

Solomon Reingehl, J. H. Elson and Wm. Eckert, of Fairfield, called Wednesday. They are on the "struck jury."

There will be English preaching at the German Luthern Church by Rev. Frederick Keller next Sunday at 10:30 a. m.

Only a few sewing machines left. The price moved them. Secure a bargain.
W. H. KIBLINGER.

A "Poverty Social" will be given in the basement of the M. E. Church next week. Look out for a more extended notice later.

Frank Kircher, of Garrett, and two friends, Mr. Hopkins and another whose name we have forgotten, were here on some business Tuesday.

J. M. Stonebreaker was here last week, and brought word that his nephew who accidentally shot himself, was still improving, though quite slowly.

Bad roads and bad weather, as well as Christmas festivities prevented our people from going to Garrett to hear the Riley's at Wagner's Opera House.

What are you waiting for? Our holiday stock is the largest; our goods new; our prices low. D. A. Hodge, Jeweler, in Robbins & McCord's drug store.

I. N. Fisher was home over Sunday, but has returned to Defiance, as the meetings there began again as soon as the holidays had been duly observed.

Get ready for another Christmas. It is close at hand. We will save you money in every purchase. D. A. Hodge, the Jeweler, in Robbins & McCord's drug store.

Oscar Klink who has been working at the Church Furniture factory, has gone to Pleasant Lake, where he will help his father build a large barn this summer.

George Lawrence, of this place, died Saturday and was buried Monday. The funeral was at the Lutheran Church. He was the father of Holly and Don Lawrence.

F. J. Yesbera is the old reliable jeweler of Auburn. He deals in nothing but good goods and warrants everything to be as represented. Leave your orders with him.

Mrs. Baker, wife of Marshal Baker, has returned from a week's visit with friends in Canton, Ohio. She was called there by the serious illness of her sister, Mrs. Dick Morgan.

Some of our exchanges have very careless accounts of the burning of the Church Furniture factory here. Why did they not read the very accurate account in the COURIER.

F. M. Dellenbaugh, of Fairfield, called last week to pay the subscription of Mrs. Sophia McNabb. Several other friends made welcome additions to our pile. Their names will all appear next week.

WOOD

Covered Albums. Would you like to get one at your own price? See

DAVENPORT, THE DRUGGIST.

Mrs. Ira Eaton, of Chicago, is here at the bedside of her mother, Mrs. W. L. Meese, who is very sick. The other daughter, Mrs. Hopkins, has been here, but has returned to her home in Michigan.

Garrett has 114 business or professional firms So says the Garrett Republican. This will surprise many of our readers, as well as please them to know that our neighboring city is prospering.

If you want anything in siverware this year for Christmas you should see F. J. Yesbera's line. His selections never were better. Remember that anything in the silverware line will be engraved free of charge.

LOST: Somewhere on Main street, Auburn, Dec 19, a red leather pocket bill book, containing money, draft and other papers. Finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving at this office or with D. Z. Hoffman.

Mike Kiplinger, of Waterloo, gave his old friend, the COURIER, a friendly visit and a Christmas gift Monday. He was here on a visit with his daughter, Mrs. Ralph Thomas, at their home on South Jackson street.

Little Pearl Ashelman wants to find her pet kitten that has strayed away. She says it is "little and white and a nice kitty" and whoever knows where it is "ought to let me know." Possibly some one can help her out in her trouble.

FOR THE FORT WAYNE TIMES.

The Dead.

BY S. W. WIDNEY.

"The living knew that they must die—
But all the dead forgotten lie."

Forgotten? No: though o'er their graves,
The long, rank grass luxuriant waves;
Though weary months or years have fled,
Since they were numbered with the dead;
Though many anxious cares have press'd
This burden on my aching breast;
Though hopes have risen like rainbow hues,
And vanished like the morning dews;
Though many scenes by memory drawn,
Like writing on the sand are gone;
Though changeful still has been my lot,
The loved—the dead are not forgot.

Forgotten? No: At somber eve,
I oft retire alone to grieve;
And oft in shades of midnight deep,
When silence reigns, I wake and weep.
And oft 'midst busy scenes of life,
'Midst folly's laugh, or passion's strife,
A cloud comes o'er my mental sky,
A tear-drop trembles in my eye—
The joys, alas! that long have fled,
The loved ones numbered with the dead,
Like shadows flit across my mind,
And leave a dense dark cloud behind.

Forgotten? No: When gathering gloom
Seems brooding o'er their silent tomb,
Through tears and sighs I look away,
And catch a glimpse of heavenly day;
When from their sad, dark resting place,
Within the monster Death's embrace,
The Savior's voice shall bid them rise,
Clad in the livery of the skies—
The lamp of life, with cheerful ray,
Drives all the murky clouds away.
Where is thy sting, O death? I cry,
Oh! grave where is thy victory?

AN interesting sentimental ceremony was performed in England recently, when some friends of the dead poet and translator, Edward Fitzgerald, planted at his grave a rose bush that had been grown from one that had flourished on the grave of Omar Khayyam, the Persian poet whom Fitzgerald paraphrased so prettily into English. William Simpson, the artist, brought home to England in 1884 a few seeds of a rose he had picked at the Persian poet's grave, and Thistleton Dyer raised plants from them in Kew Gardens.

THE fact that several of the recently constructed hotels have a private safe for each guest has led to the question as to how much they and safes in general are used by hotel patrons. More and more each year the use of the hotel safe is declining, much to the pleasure of bonifaces who have time and again been compelled to pay for packages lost or stolen that were intrusted to them. In times past some enormous sums have been placed in hotel safes. This was especially so before the custom became so prevalent of sending money by express from one point to another.

REMARKABLE discoveries of petroleum have been made on the island of Saghalien, off the eastern coast of Siberia. It is likely that this supply will furnish the China and India trade, and may limit the sales of Eastern petroleum on our own Pacific coast. The European petroleum trade is almost entirely controlled by the Russian oil monopoly, which is a wealthy corporation that has resisted encroachments on its field as successfully as the Standard Oil monopoly has done in this country. It is probable that the Russian oil operators will secure control of the Saghalien oil field if it proves as valuable as is now supposed.

THE strike on the Lehigh Valley Railroad was from the beginning a strike doomed to failure. It was begun on a wrong basis: the demand that the railroad officials shall be dictated to by outsiders instead of dealing directly with their employes. It was, moreover, a strike begun at the wrong time for success, however just its basis. The reduction of force on other railroads that has lately been made has thrown thousands of skilled railroad employes out of work. No trade organization could hope to prevent these from applying for work when they found that another railroad was needing their services and offering them permanent situations.

HOW STRANGELY our ideas of growing old change as we advance in life! To the girl in her teens the riper maiden of tweney-five seems aged. Twenty-two thinks thirty-five "an old thing." Thirty-five dreads forty, but congratulates herself that there may still be some ground to be possessed in the fifteen years before the half century shall be obtained. But fifty does not by any means give up the battle of life. It feels middle-aged and vigorous, and thinks old age a long way in the future. Sixty remembers those who have done great things at three-score; and one doubts if Parr, when he was married at one hundred and twenty, had at all begun to feel himself an old man. It is the desire of life in us which makes us feel young so long.

WILLIAM SUMNER, the musician of blessed memory, was in his day the most absent-minded man in Worcester, says the Gazette. It is a fact that a friend once met him walking placidly down Chatham street with a coal scuttle swinging in his hand. "Why, where are you going, Mr. Sumner?" he asked. "To Boston," placidly replied the old gentleman, smiling and swinging the scuttle. "Are you carrying coals to Boston?" said his friend. "Bless me," exclaimed Mr. Sumner, his countenance changing, "I thought that was my bag." Nobody ever laughed unkindly at Mr. Sumner's one failing, but sometimes it caused a friendly smile.

MOST of us lapse into forgetfulness of the fact that the Duke of Veragua is on his ducal uppers until our memory is jogged, and we recall that somebody somewhere offered last summer on behalf of the Amerian people to replenish his depleted purse. Now comes a foreign note saying that while his grace's bankruptcy amounts to nearly $1,000,000, and his creditors in Paris are very bitter in their complaints against him, yet letters from the fashionable Spanish watering place of San Sebastian describe him as giving handsome entertainments in his chateau there. Apparently a duke in debt is not required to pay up like us unfortunate republicans.

THE warlike nature of football as at present played by our young collegians is attracting general attention. When two Yale giants fell upon an opponent, the other day, and "forced his head sideways and downward upon his chest with a crackling sound" it was generally agreed that it was too much like war. The protest from West Point as to the brutality of football is not likely to go unheeded. It is time now for the Presidents of Harvard, Yale, Columbia, and Princeton to go on record as to how they view the brutal game which has killed three young men in as many weeks. Are they willing to have the intellectual standard of their colleges measured by its brutality?

"EVACUATION DAY," as the 25th of November is called by New-Yorkers, was celebrated as never before by the unveiling of a monument to Nathan Hale, the boy spy of the revolution, who was executed in 1776, when he was 21 years old. His dying words, "I regret that I have but one life to give to my country," have been an inspiration to patriotism in all the contests which this country has gone through since his death. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, a great-grand-nephew of Nathan Hale, was one of the speakers at the unveiling of the monument. Before the ceremony the members of the Washington Continental Guard in Continental uniform paraded the streets, and marched to the music of a drum beaten by a man in no uniform. It was altogether a great day for American patriotism.

THE mistake of Western farmers in going into debt to produce crops without any means of taking care of them has been shown this year by the farmers of Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho. They have been in the habit of growing wheat with no barns or granaries to put it in, relying on a supply of cheap bags into which the wheat was put as threshed. This year the supply of bags failed. The rainy season came on and several million bushels of wheat have been ruined. Some of it was threshed, piled on the ground and covered with straw. But this was damp, and with the wet straw above it this has rotted down with the rest. A few were fortunate enough to have hogs to which their wheat was fed, and these have made something from their crop. Much wheat was never cut. It was seen that there was no way to save it, and it was left to be beaten down by rains as it grew.

SHAM CALAMITY CRY.

MANUFACTURERS NEEDLESSLY HOWLING BLUE RUIN.

There Is Very Little Difference Between the Wilson Bill and the Tariff Act of 1883—Wage Cuts on False Pretenses—Tax Incomes.

No Reason for Alarm.

The manufacturers who are howling blue ruin at the mere thought of the tariff reductions proposed in the Wilson bill are showing more zeal than discretion. In their haste to condemn the new bill they forget or ignore the fact that they will be as well protected by it as they were by the protective tariff act of 1883. Mr. Jacob Schoenhof, at the request of the Reform Club, has prepared a table comparing the rates of duty under the tariff of 1883 with those in the proposed bill. The table contains 161 items and includes nearly all articles imported. On thirty-eight of these items rates are the same. On eight items duties are higher in the Wilson bill than in the act of 1883. On twenty-eight items duties differ by 5 per cent. or less. Twelve or fifteen items cannot well be compared. Leaving only about seventy items on which duties have been materially reduced. Twenty of these are in the woolen schedule, where the average reductions of 30 or 40 per cent. are fully counteracted by the removal of all duties on raw wools; thirteen more occur in the iron and steel schedule, where average reductions of about 10 per cent. are offset by free iron ore and coal. Nine more occur in the glass schedule, where duties are used mainly to support trusts and combines. Eight more are in the chemical schedule, where the duties were disproportionately and foolishly high. Four more in the flax manufactures schedule, where bagging, burlaps, etc., are really raw materials in other industries. Thus there is no reason why manufacturers should throw up their hands and utter such lamentations except that, like a petted or spoiled child, they are terribly "put out" when they can't have their own way as has been the custom. Mr. Schoenhof says, as explanatory and introductory to his tables:

> The unqualified condemnation of the Wilson bill which is meted out by the organs of the high protection party cannot surprise any one who is acquainted with the tactics of protected interests. "Claim everything" is an old warcry. The "wail of distress" has been raised so often that the public has learned to lend an indifferent ear to it. The destruction of prosperity, the ruin of industry, the pauperization of labor are predicted. It is but necessary to examine the bill from the standpoint of the high protection party up to 1890 to see how ludicrous is their present position. The demand for reduction in rates from the tariff of 1883 was universal. The Republicans cast their votes in 1888 in the firm expectation that the tariff was to be reformed, and reduced by their party if elected to power. When the McKinley bill showed gross abuse of this confidence, the voters showed their proper appreciation of this breach of trust by turning the Congress, in 1890, and the whole machinery of the government, in 1892, over to the Democratic party. In the light of this glaring fact it is well to turn to the tariff of 1883, and compare its rates with those proposed in the Wilson bill. I have prepared comparative tables giving the rates of duties collected under the tariff of 1883 and of the rates proposed in the Wilson bill. The differences are very slight. They mainly occur in articles in which raw materials have been put on the free list. Considering the advantages thereby given to manufacturers, the remaining protective duties, as in woolens, are higher under the new tariff bill than under the tariff of 1883. Protectionists certainly have no reason to complain. Tariff reformers approve of the measure as a step in the right direction. By raw materials being put on the free list our manufacturers can start on a basis equal with their foreign competitors. They can learn by their own experience that the way to improve industries is not by heaping taxes upon them. With the main prop, taxed raw materials, knocked away from under high prices, the progress made in our manufacturing industries can be depended on to work more to the advantage of the consumer than has been the case heretofore.

Blaming the Wrong Bill.

The McKinley press is making much noise about the discontinuance of work or a reduction of working hours in the plate-glass industry. The trouble with this industry is overproduction and Trustism. One of the organs of the plate-glass trade said a few days ago, with reference to the recent dissolution of the Plate-glass Trust: "This is the natural outcome of the piling up of the tremendous stocks of plate glass which manufacturers have been making for the past two years." All of the combined manufacturers wanted to enjoy profits as large as those which were taken by a smaller number of concerns a few years ago, and the ring price was made so high that it discouraged consumption. As the pile of glass was growing, the country entered upon a period of stringency caused by silver legislation and the "silver panic," and the demand for consumption was still further reduced. At last the combined manufacturers dissolved their trust, and each one sought a market for himself. This change had the effect of reducing prices from 20 to 25 per cent., but the large accumulated stocks go off slowly. It is very convenient now for the manufacturers and the McKinley press to charge the unsatisfactory condition of the industry to the account of the wicked Democrats and the Wilson bill.—New York Times.

Wage-Cuts on False Pretenses.

United States Senator James Smith, Jr., of New Jersey, said at his home in Newark the other day: "I have heard that manufacturers are very much pleased with the Wilson bill. Its passage will give them an opportunity to increase their profits 15 to 20 per cent. by cutting down wages, and at the same time charge that it is made necessary by the tariff bill. They will not say that by the bill they will save large percentages on the cost of raw materials. In the thread industry I understand the chief cause of complaint to be as to the duty on what they call netting. The prices of netting are now so high that it nearly ruins a fisherman to mend his net. In hatmaking I am informed that there is objection to a reduction of 20 per cent., but if the duties on linings and bindings and materials are reduced proportionately, I understand the hatters will be satisfied. A committee from the hatters of Bloomfield called on me to-day. I told them I thought they most needed to be protected from the Russians and Hungarians working in various places for a minimum wage and on whose importation there is no tariff."

Faith in Their Fetich.

The Republican press still persist in discussing tariff reform from their perch on stilts. They apparently expect the people of the United States to believe that without discriminating tariffs civilization would go to pot instantly. That the favored position of our beloved country on the earth's surface, the plentitude of land and of opportunity, our wonderful mineral resources, the stalwart virtues of our people, the beneficent freedom of our institutions, are all to be counted as dust in the balance beside the particular method in which the taxes are assessed. They will not believe that the people have outgrown such babyish superstitions, and have pronounced in favor of taxation for the single legitimate purpose of gathering necessary revenue. But the facts and the figures are against them.

From this time forward the discussion of tax systems must turn on their adaptation to the needs and interests of the mass, and not of favored interests at the expense of the mass. All else is vanity.—New Age.

Impolitic Conduct.

We notice some of the plate glass works are resuming operations by reducing their labor from 25 to 30 per cent. This is under the McKinley bill, and the people so doing are the greatest calamity howlers about the benefits of a high tariff. These people also have the benefits of free fuel and should be the last to attempt a reduction of labor, especially in view of the pending tariff legislation. We think that their conduct is impolitic, if not prejudicial to a change in the Wilson bill, increasing the duty above what the bill contemplates.—National Glass Budget.

Free Wool Will Benefit All.

Free wool means cheaper and better clothing for the people. It means a world market instead of a one-country market for our manufacturers. It means more constant employment and better wages relatively and absolutely for the laborers in the woolen mills. It means a double boon to the American farmer in the way of cheaper clothing for his family and higher prices for his wool. The prosperity of our woolen mills means a better market, and hence higher prices for American wool. Will the protectionist farmer keep his ear to the ground. He is going to be helped in spite of himself and his vote. The blessings of free trade fall upon the just and unjust alike.

It Makes Wheels Turn.

The Baltimore Sun says: "The publication of the Wilson tariff bill seems to have had already a stimulating effect on the industries in North Alabama. Within the past three days the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company has ordered three of its Alabama furnaces, now idle, to blow in at once. This company has also refused to sell 100,000 tons of iron at present prices for six months' delivery to London bankers, as the market is now advancing. The Gate City and Birmingham Rolling Mills, which have been idle for some months, will be put to work at once. The blowing in of three furnaces and the resumption of two rolling-mills will give employment to 3,000 men."

A Give-Away.

A reduction of duties to about the rates that prevailed ten years ago is called by the Tribune "giving away the American market to all comers." This is far from a flattering estimate of the productive and manufacturing ability of a people whose just boast it is that they can "beat all creation," and who do not need to be coddled to death to do it. The false economists who claim to be more "American" than anybody else put forth habitually the lowest opinion of their countrymen.—New York World.

Free Coal.

The Wilson bill puts coal on the free list. Anthracite coal was already free. Hence this provision will affect chiefly manufacturing industries, but this means everything from the biggest factory to the village blacksmith shop. A tariff of 75 cents a ton is now levied on bituminous coal. This is defended on the same old plea, the difference in the cost of labor here and abroad, notwithstanding the fact that the tariff is twice the total cost of mining a ton of coal.

Bulldozing Will Not Win.

The protected manufacturers who are threatening to shut down and are dismissing Democratic employes are doing effective work for tariff reform. These men are fighting for privileges, not principles, and nothing so clearly demonstrates the danger of granting special privileges as their attempt to maintain high protection by scaring Congress into rejecting the Wilson bill and bulldozing American workingmen into voting according to the dictation of their employers.

It Is Neither.

A thoughtless newspaper declares an income tax to be "impracticable and preposterous." In discussion it is well that words should have some relation to facts. In 1866 this tax yielded to the Treasury nearly $73,000,000 from 190,000 persons, and in 1867 the collections were $66,000,000 from 240,000 persons. England now gets $65,000,000 from her income tax. How can it be said that such a tax is either impracticable, preposterous or unpopular?—New York World.

On Trial.

The Democratic party is now on trial. Between to-morrow, when the regular session of Congress opens, and the summer adjournment, a grand record of low taxes and reduced expenditures should be made. It was for this that the people turned the Government over to the Democrats. If they fail, the party will be injured irreparably in the estimation of the country.—Memphis Appeal-Avalanche.

Why We Sneeze.

E. Lankester, M. D., F. R. S., in discussing the subject of sneezing, says: "As instances of the use, by the lower animals especially, of the sense of smell, I may refer to the fact that they will instinctively reject food which is poisonous, however carefully you may wrap it up, even when pressed by hunger. Monkeys, cats, dogs, and animals of the higher class will pertinaciously reject such food, this action being determined on their part by the sense of smell. It is not, however, only by the olfactory nerves that provision is made to guard against the destruction of the animal. A man may be sometimes placed under circumstances in which he will be exposed to carbonic acid, chlorine, or a variety of gases which, if taken into the system, would destroy him. He has, then, beside the sense of smell, by which some of these gases may be detected, a set of nerves which produce the sensation which we call sneezing. These are titillated by various powders and gases, which would act injuriously if they went into the lungs. The act of sneezing is the act of throwing away or getting rid of that which if a man got into his lungs would injury him. When a man sneezes he draws back in cases where, if he went forward, he would endanger his life."

Altogether Too Familiar.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, in some pithy, practical hints on pulpit oratory, says that to be winning is to be wise, but it must not be overdone. He has a friend, an evangelist, who got into the habit of calling his audience: "Dear souls." Inadvertently he would say, as he passed from place to place: "Dear Belfast souls," "Dear Dublin souls"—and before he knew it he was saying: "Dear Cork souls," which convulsed his Irish audience.—London Tid-Bits.

MALICE was the original chewing-gum of mankind.

BATTLE NOW BEGINS.

THE WILSON BILL IS LAID BEFORE CONGRESS.

Some of the Changes that Are Made and the Effects as Seen Through Democratic Eyes—Approved by the Ways and Means Committee.

The Fight Is On.

Washington dispatch: "The American people, after the fullest and most thorough debate ever given by any people to their fiscal policy, have deliberately and rightly decided that the existing tariff is wrong in principle and grievously unjust in operation." Such is the opening paragraph of the majority report submitted by the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee. The report was written by Chairman Wilson, laid before his Democratic associates, and received their approval.

The report continues with an argument in support of a tariff for revenue only, at the same time denouncing the existing tariff as an extreme system of class legislation, having no lawful or constitutional exercise. The argument is lengthy and exhaustive, dealing with the various phases of tariff legislation from 1816, and its effect upon the welfare of the nation and the industries involved. A reduction of about one-third is made upon the larger sizes of plate glass. Iron ore is free and a duty of 22½ per cent. put on pig iron. In the remainder of the iron and steel schedule substantial reductions are made. Steel rails are put at 25 per cent., a rate calculated to protect the farmers from monopoly prices. The duty on tin plate is materially lessened.

The repeal of the sugar bounty is provided for by a gradual obliteration, which shall not injure the industry nor be a source of loss to money at present invested. The rates on tobacco are left so high that ample protection is afforded. Agricultural implements are given to the farmer free, also binding twine and cotton ties. The tax on spirituous liquors is put at double the internal revenue tax on the same.

The cotton, flax, hop and jute schedule reductions have been in accordance with the general scheme of the bill, but they are not believed to be of such a marked character as to offer any special explanation. The placing of wool on the free list has justified a very substantial reduction of the duties on woolen goods. The carpet manufacturers have such a full control of the home market that they will not suffer from the free carpet wool. The average rate of duties levied under the existing law upon the dutiable goods imported in 1892 was 48.71 per cent. That the duties proposed in the present bill have been levied upon that year's importation of dutiable goods, the average rate, including those transferred to the free list, would have been 30.31 per cent, but so many of the rates of the present law are really prohibitory that it is impossible to say what its real rate of taxation really is, yet it is safe to affirm that it is much higher than any import tables will disclose.

The experience of this and other countries has shown that the decrease of tariff duties immediately operates such an enlargement of commerce of production and consumption as rapidly to make up any apparent loss of revenue threatened by these reductions. A most important change in the bill proposed from the present law will be found in the general substitution of ad valorem for specific duties. It is the purpose of the present bill to repeal section 3 of the tariff act of Oct. 1, 1890.

CARLISLE HEARD FROM.

Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury Sent to Congress.

Washington dispatch: The annual report of John G. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury, has been sent to Congress. The Secretary estimates the revenues of the government for the fiscal year which will end June 30 at $430,121,000, and expenditures at $458,121,000, leaving a deficit of $28,000,000 on the year. He mentions that there are Pacific Railroad bonds, known as "currency 6s," issued in aid of the Pacific railroads, falling due with the year 1894, to the amount of $2,362,000, which must be paid at maturity, and recommends that Congress take action at this session to provide for them. He suggests as a means of enabling the government to promptly meet the emergency and to provide a larger reserve fund several courses of action. One is the issue of 3 per cent. five-year bonds in small amounts to be disposed of through the subtreasuries and postoffices to our own people. Another, the issue of $50,000,000 in one-year 3 per cent. bonds at par. Until the effect of the repeal of the Sherman silver-purchase law is more fully developed he does not consider it advisable to recommend further specific legislation on that subject. He favors legislation to authorize a more extended use of silver certificates. He refers to the opinion of his predecessor and of the late Attorney General that the gain or seigniorage resulting from the coinage of the silver bullion as it progresses constitutes a part of the general assets of the treasury, and states that he has ordered the mints at New Orleans and San Francisco to be kept in readiness to commence the coinage of standard silver dollars at any time when required. He champions the system of substituting ad valorem duties for specific duties in the collection of customs, and recommends an increase of 10 cents a gallon in the internal revenue tax on distilled spirits, the imposition of new taxes on playing cards, cosmetics, perfumeries, legacies and successions and incomes derived from investment in stocks and bonds of corporations and joint stock companies.

STARVING IN GOTHAM.

Over 140,000 Unemployed in the Eastern Metropolis.

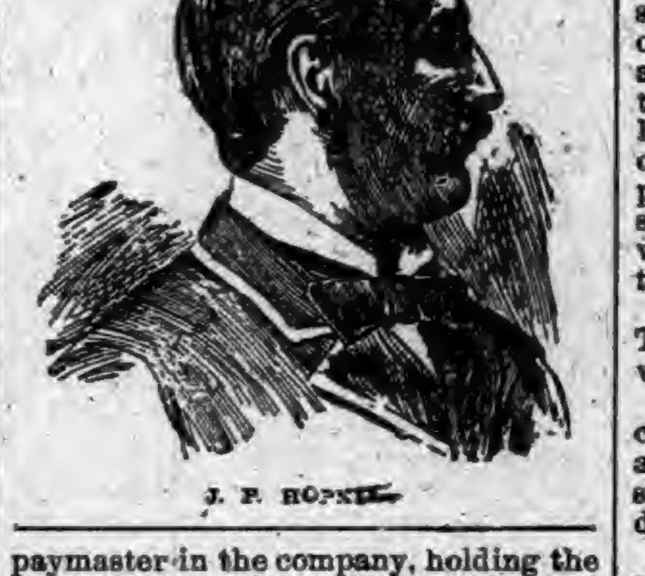
An army numerically stronger than that which conquered Bonaparte at Waterloo is freezing and starving to death in New York, the most wealthy city on the American continent, according to a dispatch. Charity is doing little, and little is expected from it. The charity of Gotham is cold as a polar iceberg. It is doubtful if any other city in the United States even contained so many homeless people as New York does this winter. The cosmopolitan character of the town, suggesting in its heterogeneous commingling of races natural deprivation—often mistaken for enforced poverty—at present serves to bring to the surface pitiful instances of want without number which cannot be explained away by comparisons of habit, thrift, and individual fitness. The suffering is genuine and enforced, as is instantly made apparent by recalling the number of mills, factories, and other industrial ventures which have been compelled to shut down as a result of the financial depression. An authoritatively compiled statement shows that there are over 140,000 persons without employment in the city.

CHICAGO'S NEW MAYOR.

J. P. Hopkins Elected to Fill Out Mayor Harrison's Unexpired Term.

John P. Hopkins, who has been elected Mayor of Chicago to fill out the unexpired term of the late Mayor Harrison, has been only thirteen years a resident of Chicago. He was born in Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 29, 1858, in the old Eighth Ward, Cleveland and Bissell's ward. He was educated in the schools of Buffalo, but is not a collegiate. He resides at Kensington, near the southern limits of Chicago.

He reached the Western metropolis in 1879, obtaining employment at the car works in Pullman, where he rose from a lumber shover in the yards to paymaster in the company, holding the latter position from 1883 to 1888, when he became secretary and treasurer of the Arcade Trading Company of Pullman. In 1889 the company reorganized as the Secord-Hopkins Company, and, moving from Pullman to Kensington, established the largest store south of Twenty-second street. As early as 1882 Mr. Hopkins took an interest in politics, and has filled several minor offices. Since 1885 he has been influential in Democratic counsels, and has figured on important committees. Last year he was chairman of the local campaign committee. He is the President of the Cook County Democracy and a member of the Iroquois Club.



J. P. HOPKINS.

A RAILROAD FOR THE PEOPLE.

A Gigantic Scheme Which Western Farmers Favor.

An enterprise, gigantic and unique, is on foot in Kansas and other Western States, and a convention was recently held in Topeka, Kan., to formulate plans. The enterprise is nothing less than the construction of two great lines of railroad between the Gulf of Mexico and the British possessions. This movement was started by the Nebraska Legislature in 1892, when a series of resolutions was adopted setting forth the needs of such transportation facilities in the interest of the producing classes of the great Mississippi Valley. The plans were conceived by leading Populists of Western States, Gov. Lewelling, of Kansas, being one of the original movers in the enterprise. It is the purpose of the originators of the scheme to have the ten States through which the lines are to pass build and equip the same. They claim that a tax of five cents per acre on the lands in these States would cover all this expense and leave a surplus of over $2,000,000 in the treasury. One line is to be built from Duluth, through Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas and Louisiana to Lake Charles, on the Gulf of Mexico. The other is to begin at the northern boundary of South Dakota and run through Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas to Galveston.

The Nebraska Legislature declared in a series of resolutions that, by reason of the nearness to Gulf ports as against the long haul to the Atlantic seaboard, the exports of wheat, cattle, beef products, meat products and breadstuffs of all kinds, which now amount in round numbers to $475,000,000 annually to the producers of this region, would be reduced 20 per cent., amounting to $94,000,000 annually, which would pay the cost of the road three and one-half times. And further, that the furnishing of said interior north and south transportation would attract the great manufacturing industries to the Mississippi Valley country and make it the most populous, as well as the wealthiest portion of the United States.

A plan of action has been agreed upon. First a charter will be secured by a provisional committee, consisting of one from each of the ten States. This committee is to act as directors until such time as the Legislatures of three or more of the States interested shall have passed an act making it a part of the duty of their State Railroad Commissioners to take charge of said railroad, when the charter and all the properties accumulated under it shall be turned over to them in trust for the people.

The provisional directors will be expected to arrange for the construction of 2,550 miles of road in the immediate future, to cost $38,250,000. The entire cost, it is estimated, will be saved to shippers by reduced rates annually. The money with which to carry on the work will be raised by issuing 4 per cent. construction bonds in denominations of $5 each and multiples thereof, payable at the option of the road, and receivable for all kinds of traffic. Forty-year 4 per cent. first mortgage bonds will also be issued, to be taken by the several States and purchased from the school funds.

This is the plan of the movers of the enterprise, but the question now is—will the Legislatures give aid to the scheme?

ANARCHY RAMPANT.

Angry Snarling in Several of the Nations of Europe.

France is still much excited over the activity of the anarchists, and arrests and expulsions of prominent and dangerous anarchists are going on daily. The repressive measures of the police are driving the anarchists to desperation and they openly threaten to create a scene in Paris beside which the Barcelona affair and the explosion in the Chamber of Deputies will pale into insignificance. The officials of the Paris Bourse, a mammoth building in which the financial affairs of the capital are transacted, have received notification that the place will be blown to atoms, and extra guards have been assigned to watch the building. It is understood that the police have the names of 200 Anarchists, mostly Italians and Germans, who will be soon banished from the country.

In Spain the Anarchist who threw the dynamite bomb in the Lyceum Theater of Barcelona, killing thirty persons, has confessed and glories in his infamy. In Berlin a meeting of 500 Anarchists was held during the week and the Anarchist Pallas, who attempted the assassination of Gen. Campos, in Spain; Ravachol, who was guillotined in France, and Vaillant, were eulogized as heroes. In England the notorious Louise Michel advocates the doctrine of dynamite. She says that repressive measures will drive them to deeds giving victory.

$5,000,000 Tobacco Bill Saved.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23. [Special.]—The Chicago Inter Ocean's Illustrated Supplement, describing the great success and merit of NO-TO-BAC, has made it famous in a day.

Mr. H. L. Kramer, the active man, was seen to-day at his office, 45 Randolph street, and in talking of NO-TO-BAC'S growth, said it was hard work to keep up with the rapidly increasing demand, as every box sold advertised NO-TO-BAC'S merit.

He said, "NO-TO-BAC is not sold on the strength of the thousands and tens of thousands of testimonial statements, but under an absolute guarantee to cure, or money refunded." That made a long story about merit very short, as it absolutely protects the user from physical injury or financial loss. "Why," said he, "NO-TO-BAC will make 100,000 cures this year, and the saving will average $50.00 for every one cured, or a grand total of $5,000,000 saved from going up in smoke and out in spit." NO-TO-BAC is, indeed, a God-send to the poor man these hard times. According to the testimonials, however, the money-saving is the least consideration, for almost every one reports an improvement of the nervous system, increase in weight, and a revival of physical and mental powers that is indeed miraculous.

Prominent physicians look upon NO-TO-BAC as a great success, and are very free to prescribe it.

Every wholesale drug house in this country and Canada sells NO-TO-BAC, and the retail druggists are pushed to supply customers, and the direct mail demand is immense.

The cost of NO-TO-BAC compared with results is a small matter, as the saving in a week pays the cost of a cure for a life-time. NO-TO-BAC is sold for $1.00 a box, or three boxes for $2.50, with a guarantee to cure, or money refunded.

A few extra copies of the Inter Ocean supplement (8 pages,) illustrated in five colors, have been secured and will be mailed for asking, by addressing The Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago office, 45 Randolph St., New York office, 10 Spruce St., Laboratory, Indiana Mineral Springs, Ind.

His Face Was His Fortune.

On the southern edge of Phelps County lives Swartzlander, who is considered the ugliest man in Missouri, and there are some of his neighbors who will bet his equal cannot be produced from any quarter. Swartzlander, who is 30 years old, has white hair, eyes like a Chinaman, no eyebrows, a nose of abnormal proportions, which lops over almost to his cheek-bone, and is ornamented at the end with a beautiful comic bulb. He is lank and tall, and there are numerous other imperfections that add so this picture of general and particular ugliness. Swartzlander was arrested about a year ago for cutting timber on Government lands in Pulaski County, and when his trial came up at Springfield before the United States Court, the prisoner was promptly arraigned. While the District Attorney was reading, the Judge said, addressing the District Attorney: "You may enter nolle prosequi in the prisoner's case. After a careful scrutiny of his physiogomy I am convinced that any man who is compelled to carry that face is punished quite enough for the amount of lumber which he is charged with having unlawfully taken from Government lands. You are discharged, Mr. Swartzlander. Go as quickly as you can, and don't forget to take your face with you."

Undoubtedly this decision of the learned and discriminating Judge at Springfield, Mo., entitles Scott Swartzlander to the undisputed title, "The Ugliest man in Missouri."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Active Old Age.

When a man has lived to a great age, there is generally a widespread curiosity as to his method of accomplishing it. The centenarian is questioned as to his habits of life, but alas! the evidence obtained is conflicting indeed. Sometimes it appears that he has obeyed all the laws of virtuous and temperate living, and again he confesses that he has eaten all sorts of indigestible food, and that baths are to him an unknown luxury.

An example which some people would find it pleasant to follow, is that of an English woman who made old age a question of frequent eating and drinking.

"Folks should take their meals regular," said she. "A dew bit and breakfast, a stay bit and dinner, a mammet and crummet, and a bit after supper."

This made eight meals in all. No wonder her tissues were repaired so fast that they had no time to waste! One rule, however, is safe for those who would live to be old. Ignore the fact of advancing age, and keep up an interest in the events of an active life.

"I don't mind your knowing how old I am," said a man who was bent on long life, "but I mind knowing it myself."

He it was who used to say to himself every morning, when he was shaving:

"Now, John, you are only twenty-four hours older than you were yesterday, and what you did yesterday you can do to-day."

American Fruits Abroad.

Florida and California fruit is competing successfully with Mediterranean products in European markets this year, and the shipments already are largely in excess of those of previous years. Successful experiments have also been made this year with shipments of California and Washington fruit to Japan and other countries of the Orient. From a twenty-acre prune ranch a Washington grower obtained this year forty tons of dried fruit, which he sold in Portland at $150 a ton.

Bucaramanquina.

The name in the headline is that of a new species of fibrous mineral recently discovered by Senor H. Elvoy Valenzuela in the United States of Colombia. It has many of the remarkable properties of asbestos and is perfectly transparent as well as incombustible. It can be reduced to pulp and molded into light fire and water proof boards and shingles for houses. The discoverer believes that it is adapted to papermaking and that it will also be used in the manufacture of carpets and clothing.

A New Year's Gift Heralded.

The measureless popularity of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has been the growth of more than a third of a century. As in the past, the coming new year will be ushered in by the appearance of a fresh Almanac, clearly setting forth the nature, uses and operation of this medicine of world-wide fame. It is well worth perusal. Absolute accuracy in the astronomical calculations and calendar will, as before, be valuable characteristics, while the reading matter will include statistics, humor and general information, accompanied by admirably executed illustrations. The Almanac is issued from the publishing department of The Hostetter Company at Pittsburg, and will be printed on their presses in English, German, French, Welsh, Norwegian, Swedish, Holland, Bohemian and Spanish. All druggists and country dealers furnish it without cost.

Assisting a Novelist.

While Wilkie Collins was once staying with his mother a lady visitor came. This lady said to Collins: "You seem to have made a great success with your villain in the 'The Woman in White.' I have read the book; I have studied this villain, but he is not half a villain. You don't know a real villain; you have imagined this villain. I know a villain, and the next time you want to do a villain come to me. I am very close to one; I have got one constantly in my eye—in fact, it is my own husband!" Wilkie Collins often told this story, but withheld the name of the lady. It was the wife of Bulwer Lytton.—Young Man.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Read the Label. Send for Book.

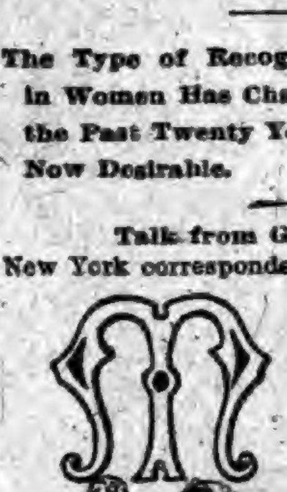
THE GIRL OF TO-DAY.

HOW SHE DIFFERS FROM THE GIRL OF A WHILE AGO.

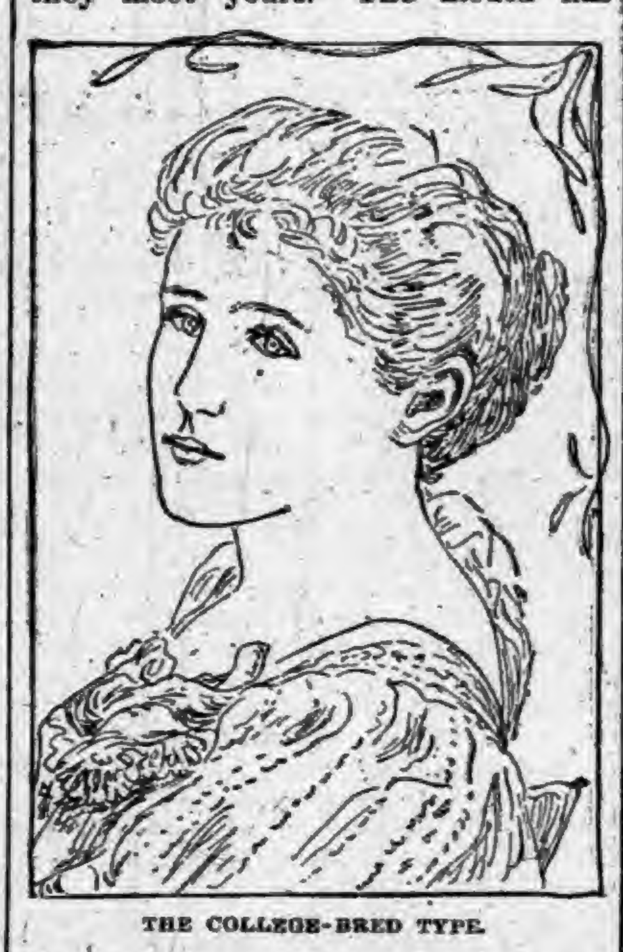
The Type of Recognized Facial Beauty in Women Has Changed Remarkably in the Past Twenty Years—Points That Are Now Desirable.

Talk from Gotham Town.

New York correspondence:



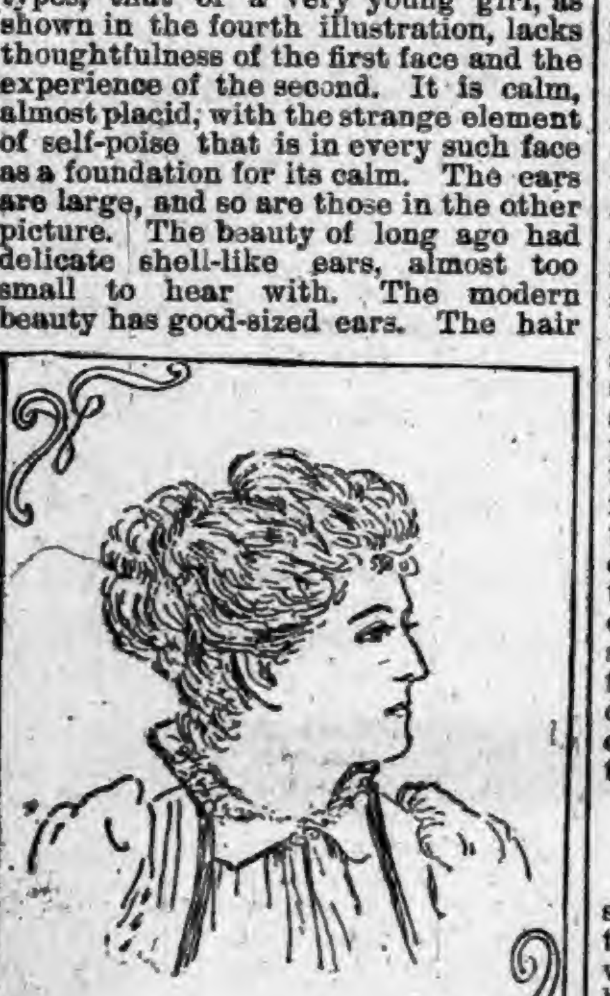
MANY a young woman of to-day, like the milkmaid of the song, can truthfully say, "My face is my fortune, sir," although your modern young beauty is quite different in feature from that saucy miss. This is because the type of recognized facial beauty in women has changed remarkably in the past twenty years. Gradually the very points that used to be considered the most essential have altered or been lost sight of in the heightened appreciation for others. Take eyes, for instance; large eyes are beautiful, of course, yet the average pretty woman of to-day has not large eyes. She has bright, clear, or steady ones, but they are seldom the big, round child-eyes that the girl of a while ago must have had to be thought pretty. A last analysis of the pretty woman of to-day leads one to suspect that the general education of women and the special education of the college girl has had something to do with the new idea of beauty. The second picture in this column is of a woman who was the belle of her class at college and who during her past season has been acknowledged a superbly beautiful woman. The smooth, plump neck and rippling hair are there, but no picture can do full justice to her eyes with their sparkle of wit and challenge that dazzles you into an acknowledgment of their beauty when they meet yours. The mouth has charmed by a thousand curves of shifting change, each making her more adorable than the last, each a challenge to discount her beauty if you dare. The beauty of her face is potent, aglow with health, sympathy, passion, vitality and intelligence. A beauty beyond question, and as surely one of a new type within the past score of years.



THE COLLEGE-BRED TYPE.

Another woman, older than the beauty of twenty years back ever was, is acknowledged as a type of to-day's loveliness. She is thirty at least, which in itself is a new idea. Her copper-colored hair, a mass of glossy wavings, is caught up and back after a manner all her own, and its profusion emphasizes the extreme delicacy of her features. The nose is dainty enough in its faintly Roman outline. The lips are firm, a little thin, but even in the picture ready to speak words that sparkle. The eyes, again, are not large, but are at once keen, shadowed, and well arched by fine eyebrows. She is essentially a beauty of to-day, nervous, delicately and vividly colored, with the full throat and fine skin which are now a requisite. She possesses, besides that intensity which is hardly passion, the warmth which is not quite fire, the alertness that is more wit than intellect, and the spirituality that is, after all, not soul. The face is not at all the face of the girl just passed, yet in it are some of the same characteristics. This pictured face, too, is evidently hardly as eloquent of its own beauty as is the radiant original. Modern beauty is a thing of sparkle, mood, change, glow, and of many other things, which, somehow, do not picture themselves save on the mind.

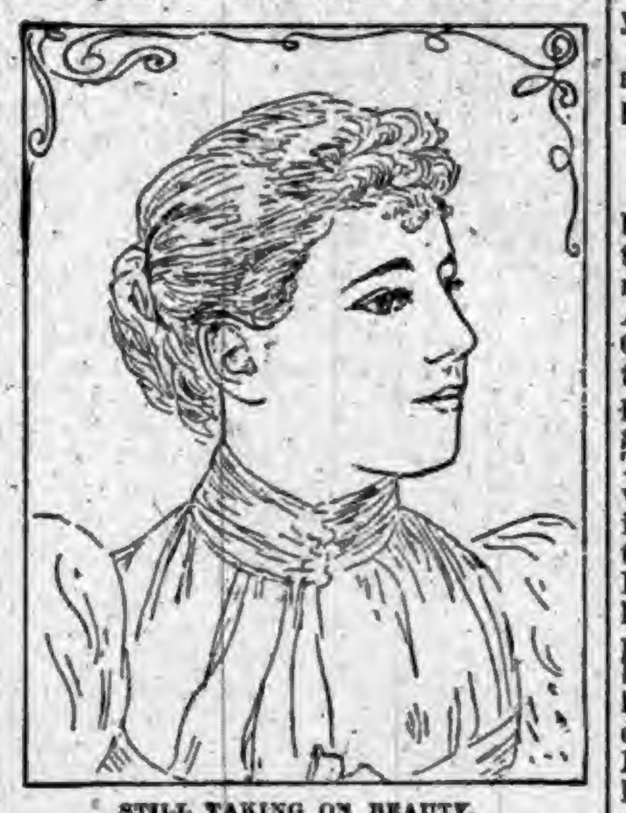
Another face among the accepted types, that of a very young girl, as shown in the fourth illustration, lacks thoughtfulness of the first face and the experience of the second. It is calm, almost placid, with the strange element of self-poise that is in every such face as a foundation for its calm. The ears are large, and so are those in the other picture. The beauty of long ago had delicate shell-like ears, almost too small to hear with. The modern beauty has good-sized ears. The hair is again beautiful, rippling, and with an appearance of being upright just at the root, and so prettily free. It is arranged with the individuality that all these beauties show in the management of their tresses.



OLDER THAN WAS ONCE PERMISSIBLE.

It seems just the sort of hair to turn loosely from her smooth forehead, and all women of this type have smooth foreheads. None of them has a blank or undeveloped one. Again, the eyes are not large, but are steady and clear, while the lids that shadow the eyes in the second face are almost defiant in their steady level. This third face lacks the brilliancy of either of the others. The lips are a little fuller, and one needs to be told that the skin is clear and brilliant and the lips riotous with changeful smiles and wistfulness to realize that the face is a beautiful one, and one that gives promise of even more loveliness. It is different from the other two, but fine coloring, steady eyes and mobility of feature are here, and self-poise, which should never be lacking.

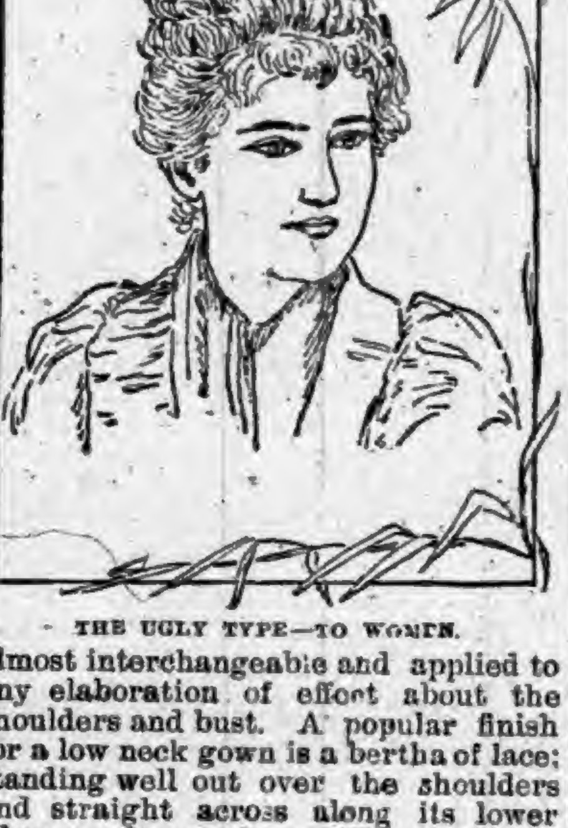
The most dangerous modern beauty is the ugly belle. She seems absolutely irresistible. She suits all tastes, she rules the men unchallenged, and not until you see her face pictured and discover what havoc she has made among your admirers do you realize with a shock that she is downright ugly. She has the pretty hair our belles always have, and it is tossed up as only they dare to handle it. The forehead is so high that the fringe is imperative. The eyes, her most irresistible feature, as every one admits, are distinctly small and the brows above are well marked. This girl's admirers will tell you that her beauty dazzles them, that her lips quiver and scorch red with the wit and fire of her speech, and that no such eyes ever dazzled a man blind. Somehow the praise of wit and dazzling qualities always comes close upon acknowledgment of a beauty. It is hard to choose from these four typical faces. They are all so different, yet so oddly alike. In them all are health, self-poise, brilliant wit, and much more than the mere charm of sex. Such points will characterize the face of every modern beauty that you turn your dazzled eyes upon.



STILL TAKING ON BEAUTY.

To do the hair in the prettiest way for the present fashions in evening wear, part off the front hair from the forehead straight around the head, so that a fringe falls over the ears and the nape of the neck. This fringe is very thin at the forehead, and a little thicker at the temples and from there around the head. It is cut very short across the forehead and curled in tiny little corkscrews, which, if you prefer, may be combed out soft. At the temples the fringe is made into two curls which hang well down on the cheek; the next two over the ears hang a little longer, falling to the side of the neck, the rest graduate prettily, the three or four at the back hanging even and short. Above these at the back the hair is drawn into a round coil which extends till it is even with the top of the head. A tiny bandeau passes around the head just above the short forehead fringe, under the temple and ear curls and again over the curls at the back of the neck. This proves the side curls real, but it is so slight a detail that if you like to buy a bandeau with the whole set attached, you may do so and no one will notice the difference unless the thing should slip down over your pretty little nose. This fashion of the hair is not so trying as that of drawing the hair from a center part, and the little bang in front gives the youthful effect we all like, while quaintness and demureness are suggested by the side curls. These side locks are most gentle to hollow cheeks.

Rever effects, deep frills and berthas are much in vogue, and the terms seem almost interchangeable and applied to any elaboration of effort about the shoulders and bust. A popular finish for a low neck gown is a bertha of lace; standing well out over the shoulders and straight across along its lower edge, no sleeves show. The rage for ruffles is a regular delirium. Whole dresses are made of them, a skirt being composed of as many as twenty-four, all alike in depth and set one above another, and lapping the least bit. Perpendicular panels of insertion are some relief. The bodice seems to be ten little frills, set the same way, that extend horizontally. A plastron of insertion goes down the front, and the sleeves are a series of frills setting out further and further till a straight line may be drawn from elbow to elbow. The worst of all is that the frills of the bodice and those of the sleeves are presently in line and seems all to be a continuation, and by this time the onlooker thinks himself daft, wonders if his condition is apparent to every one, and asks the nearest to please get him away quietly.



THE UGLY TYPE—TO WOMEN.

A Thrilling Sight on the Plains.

One of the strangest sights I ever saw, says a prospector who had just returned from Lincoln County, Nevada, was the cowboys killing the wild horses. There are 1,000 or more wild horses in the Cherry Creek valley and foothills. These wild horses—that is, the stallions—lead away the domestic mares, and once away they get as wild as the other horses. So the cowboys go out and kill them. One morning, seeing a party of five well mounted and armed men going out to kill some horses, I followed. They had a boy to change horses and ride round and round in a circle, miles in extent, after them. As the wild horses came around the cowboys would bang them over. I saw horse after horse—great, magnificent stallions of all colors—killed in this way. They would come around on the dead run. There would be a shot, or probably a fusillade of shots. The horse would take a leap into the air and come down dead.

Snubbing a Bumptious Lord.

A prominent Englishman, Lord D., and a proverbial hater of America and Americans, was dining lately in Paris with the British Minister and next to him at the table was a noted Newport belle, Miss X. The conversation had drifted to a discussion of things American. It is needless to say that Lord D. made some pretty disagreeable remarks about some Americans he had met and some Yankee customs he abhorred.

"Why, d'ye know," he continued, with an almost unpardonable want of tact, "that at some of the places I dined in America I saw people eat with their knives and spill their soup on the table cloth!"

Miss X. was thoroughly provoked by this time, but she replied with apparent unconcern:

"What poor letters of introduction you must have had, my lord."

There was no more unpleasant talk about America that evening.—Harper's Bazar.

Tackled by an Ostrich.

Although he is not large-sized, Albert G. Theis, the musician and sweet tenor, had a singular set-to with an immense male ostrich in Natal, South Africa, several years ago. He was at Cape Colony singing in an opera troupe. When the company ceased to pay salaries he and a companion began to look around for excitement. They visited Montagu Pass, where a wealthy Boer had an ostrich farm. An immense cock ostrich escaped from the inclosure and tackled Mr. Theis. He was knocked down, and his clothes literally torn to shreds. His great presence of mind saved his life. He lay on his chest, face downward, and kept quiet, while the enraged beast danced a war jig on his back. A poor Hottentot came along, and the ostrich left Theis and gave chase. The Boer, who saw it from a place of safety, said the ostrich cost too much too kill, even to have saved the tenor's life. Theis has never visited Africa again.

Curious Will of an English Sport.

In drawing up a will, it is always best to call in the aid of a solicitor. Otherwise your executors may have a lot of trouble, and the bulk of your property be swallowed up in law costs. These consequences are likely to follow in the case of the will of Morris Roberts, the Birmingham prize fighter. It is a very curious document. One annuity is left to a female relation on condition that she is not convicted of theft, drunkenness or immorality. On conviction for any of these offenses the annuity ceases. To a male relation a legacy is left on condition that he part from the woman with whom he is now living. The bulk of the property is ordered to remain in the Bank of England for twenty years, at the expiration of which time it is to be equally divided among the sorrowing relations.—London Figaro.

Where the Enemy Could Not Hit It.

Marshal Blucher, the famous Prussian General, was always foremost in fight. His zeal in attack was such, indeed, that the Russians nicknamed him "Marshal Forwards."

After the Battle of Waterloo, Louis XVIII., the King of France, desired to bestow upon him the Order of the Holy Ghost, but the old soldier would not accept it. He hadn't forgotten how Napoleon had trodden on his country for years, and he hated France and everything French. The Duke of Wellington endeavored to persuade him to receive this mark of royal respect. "If I do," said Blucher, "I will hang the Order on my back." "Well," replied the Duke, "if you do, you will only show how highly you value it, by hanging it where the enemy will never hit it." This was a neatly-turned compliment.

The Duke of Wellington.

The reported invention of a bullet-proof "plastron" recalls the anecdote connected with the Duke of Wellington and a somewhat similar invention. The inventor, having obtained an interview with the Duke at the Horse Guards, was requested to put on the armor, which was stated to be of some light material worn beneath the clothing. The Duke having expressed his approval of its appearance, the inventor, highly pleased, dilated on its perfect qualities warmly, until the commander-in-chief quietly asked one of his staff to order the attendance of a file of the guards, with a few rounds of ball cartridge. Needless to add, the inventor made a hurried exit, and nothing more was heard of this invulnerable armour.

A River Which Runs Up Hill.

The Nile, which is the only river in Africa of any size flowing north or south, starts near the equator, where the surface of the earth is most distant from the center of the earth, and flows northward, where the surface is less distant from the center, so that it flows down hill. In this country the Mississippi flows up hill—that is, its source is nearer to the center of the earth than its mouth by several miles, so that its waters flow up hill.

Dipping Up Rice Birds.

The Charlestown News tells some marvelous stories about the abundance of rice birds in the dikes and marshes back of that city. There are always plenty of them for the sportsman and caterer at this season of the year, but never before have they been seen in such swarms, darkening the air as they fly from place to place. They have almost ceased to be a target for shotguns, and are so thick and close together that they are caught with a dip-net like so many fish. One amateur marksman reports that with two discharges of his shotgun he brought down 180 of the birds. The News says: "The regular way now, however, is to get a boat and a dip-net and go among the ditches in the old rice fields and dip up the birds. A gentleman went out a few nights ago and returned with 1,236 birds. It required a wagon and two buckboards to carry them all home. Quite a considerable sum has been realized by several parties who embarked in the rice-bird business. They can be bought on the plantations for a mere song, and when taken to town are sold for at least 25 cents a dozen."

She Knew It Already.

There is an old lady living in a Somersetshire village who makes frantic efforts to keep abreast of the times. Circumscribed, however, in her social sphere and with limited opportunities of development it is difficult and she is compelled sometime to resort to her imagination, the result being occasionally of a somewhat surprising and amusing description.

Vain is the effort to tell her anything she does not already know, or startle her with information.

Last winter she went to a church "sociable" and as she entered, the room one of the young ladies said, "Good evening, auntie. I am very glad you came; we are going to have a tableau this evening."

"Yes, I know, I know," replied the old lady, "you needn't tell me that. Why, I smelt 'em cooking when I first came in at the door."—London Exchange.

Flourishing on Superstition.

Mrs. Colin Campbell conducts a novel business in Rochester, N. Y. She is the proprietor of a "cricket farm." She rears only the black crickets known as field crickets, keeping them in large glass jars ranged about the room. She sells the little insects to the superstitious, who believe in the luck that crickets bring. They do not seem to have brought much to the Campbells, who, twelve years ago, were moderately well-off New York people, worth $30,000 or so, and who by sickness, fire, and the like have been reduced almost to want. There was an old lady in Charleston not many years ago who turned a penny by the sale of spider-pills, which were considered a sovereign remedy for certain fevers. The "daddylong-leg" spider was in great demand in the lower wards as long as she lived.—Charleston News.

No Danger of a Salt Famine.

According to a computation of the Berg und Huettenmännische Zeitung, the amount of salt in the sea waters of the globe, if extracted, would be greater in mass than the land, so far as it appears above the surface. The seas, it says, cover 73 per cent. of the earth's surface, estimated at 9,260,000 (German) square miles. The per centage of chlornatrium in the sea is the same at all depths. Assuming that the average depth of the sea is a half (German) mile, there are then 3,400,000 cubic miles of sea water. A cubic mile of sea water contains, on the average, about twenty-five kilograms of salt. The 3,400,000 cubic miles of seawater would, therefore, contain 85,000 cubic miles of distilled pure salt.

To Be Sure.

Prose is the enemy of poetry, and always has been.

A Quaker who had a young and pretty daughter was awakened one night by some one singing under a window. A certain young gentleman, it appeared, had mistaken the father's window for the daughter's.

Several airs were sung, and finally the serenader struck into "Home, Sweet Home." The old gentleman got out of bed and raised the window.

"Young man," said he, "if thou hast a home, and a sweet home, as thou sayest, why don't thee go home?"

Missed His Vocation.

Prince Bismarck was once pressed by a certain American official to recommend his son for a diplomatic place. "He is a very remarkable fellow," said the proud father; "he speaks seven languages." "Indeed," said Bismarck, who does not hold a very high opinion of linguistic acquirements; "what a wonderful head-waiter he would make."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

Wonderful in its Effects.

Mr. J. P. Blaize, an extensive real estate dealer in Des Moines, Iowa, narrowly escaped one of the severest attacks of pneumonia while in the northern part of that state during a recent blizzard, says the Saturday Review. Mr. Blaize had occasion to drive several miles during the storm and was so thoroughly chilled that he was unable to get warm, and inside of an hour after his return he was threatened with a severe case of pneumonia or lung fever. Mr. Blaize sent to the nearest drug store and got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, of which he had often heard, and took a number of large doses. He says the effect was wonderful and in a short time he was breathing quite easily. He kept on taking the medicine and the next day was able to come to Des Moines. Mr. Blaize regards his cure as simply wonderful. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Died, at his home in Stafford township, this county, Saturday morning, Dec. 23, 1893, in the 89th year of his age, Peter Grube. Deceased was born in Bavaria, Germany, Dec. 26, 1804. In December, 1835, in his native land he was united in marriage to Elizabeth May, a native also of Bavaria. To this happy union were born five children, three of whom are living, Henry and Peter, his well known sons, and his daughter, Elizabeth Cannon. In the spring of 1836 he left his native land of vine clad hills and with his wife crossed the wide ocean, landing in New York City with but eleven dollars in money left. He lived there two years. In August, 1838, he moved to Stark county, Ohio, and in August, 1844, he removed to Stafford township, where he purchased the home where he died, paying $50 in cash and the balance in eight years. He afterward added to this until he had 215 acres. Times were very hard here then. He left his wife and children and worked in Hicksville, O., at 50 cents a day to keep them in bread He was a weaver by trade and cleared his land by daylight and ran his hand loom by night. He was small of stature but of wonderful endurance, often walking to Auburn and back, a distance of 27 miles, in about half a day. December 22, 1868, his beloved wife passed away, since which time his daughter and son Peter have lived with him. Mr. Grube was one of the best men it has been the privilege of the writer to ever have known. A confirmed Lutheran in his own country, circumstances made it more convenient to meet with the Methodists in his adopted country; yet, wherever he may have been found he would have been a whole souled practical Christian, proving his faith beyond cavil by his noble works. A place at his bountiful table was always ready for the stranger or the hungry. His Bible was always found near him and his leisure hours devoted to its careful study. His word was as good as a bond and none knew him but to honor and respect him. His funeral took place from his late residence last Tuesday, Rev. Tedro, of the U. B. Church, officiating. The remains were interred in the Edgerton, O., cemetery. His virtues will live long after his death.

Also $1 for one dog, $2, for each female dog, and $2 for each additional dog.

The Road and Special Road Tax are included in first installment. The Poll and Dog Tax are divided equally between the two installments.

Taxes of 1893 are due the first day of January, 1894, and may be paid in full or in two installments. The first installment must be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1894, the second installment on or before the First Monday in November, 1894. If the first installment is not paid when due both installments become delinquent. Ten per cent will be added and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

The Treasurer will not be responsible for the penalty and charges on delinquent taxes resulting from any omission of the person paying, to state definitely on what property, in whose name, and in what township or corporation it was assessed.

Persons owing delinquent taxes should pay them at once. The law is of such a character that there is no option left to the Treasurer but to enforce the collection of the delinquent taxes, however much he may regret to collect the same by sale of property.

"The owner of property on the first day of April each year, shall be liable for the taxes of that year. The purchaser of property on the first day of April shall be considered the owner on that day."

Examine your receipts before leaving the office and see that all your property is included.

No county order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday in February, 1894.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days. We have 6,000 receipts to make and all cannot be made the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the 3d Monday in April and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their land and lots.

No receipts will be made out for any party until they are ready to pay.

Assignees, Guardians, Administrators and others who pay taxes on property in trust, and persons whose taxes are complicated, such as individual estates, etc., are earnestly requested to settle such taxes before the the last few days, as it requires considerable time to make the divisions and separate receipts therefor. As the Treasurer cannot know the location of each person's property, taxpayers should designate the property on which they wish to pay taxes, and see that all property is specified on their receipts. If they have land in more than one township or town, or desire to pay taxes on lands not in their name, call the Treasurer's attention to the matter.

REUBEN SAWVEL, Treasurer.

Election of Trustee.

Auburn, Ind., Dec. 13, '93.

Notice is hereby given that at the regular meeting of Auburn Lodge, K. of P., to be held Friday night, Dec. 29, a trustee will be elected to fill vacancy of George Rakestraw. M. B. Willis, Jr., 50-52 K. of R. & S.

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with neuralgia and rheumatism, his stomach was disordered, his liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shephard, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold by Robbins & McCord 3

A Household Treasure.

D. W. Fuller, of Canajoharie, N. Y., says that he always keeps Dr. King's New Discovery in the house and his family has always found the very best results follow its use; that he would not be without it, if procurable. G. A. Dykeman, druggist, Catskill, N. Y., says that Dr. King's New Discovery is undoubtedly the best cough remedy; that he has used it in his family for eight years, and it has never failed to do all that is claimed for it. Why not try a remedy so long tried and tested. Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1. 3

Mr. and Mrs. Wm Wise left Monday for a Christmas visit with friends in Michigan.

John Peters left last Thursday for Pentwater, Mich., to visit his mother, Mrs. Scerman.

J. C. Conrad and family, of St. Joe, ate their Christmas turkey with Mrs. C.'s mother, Mrs. Baughman.

Mrs. Hattie Benner, and Master Harry of Ashley, are the guests of Mrs B.'s parents, Mr. and Mrs Howey.

F. Buchanan and family, were the guests of Mrs B.'s parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E Rash, of Auburn, Christmas.

Joseph Koch's had their family reunion on Christmas day, all the children being present but Maggie, now Mrs. John Updegraph, of Northern Michigan.

Of recent date Mrs. John Hamilton, of Jackson township, had a stroke of paralysis and at this writing is unable to converse with her many callers.

Saturday evening was quite favorable for the exercises, the church being well filled. A few had the pleasure of standing This time the tree was not so costly loaded as heretofore Several sets of silver knives and forks, down to 5 cent handkerchiefs, but every little boy and girl received presents. James Howey had just moved here but little Marion and Maurice were smiling with the rest of the little folks over their presents.

SUMMIT.

Miss Carrie Gramling went to Pleasant Lake last Wednesday.

Mrs Georgie Barker was on the sick list a few days last week.

Miss Cora Penick is home through the holidays visiting her parents.

F. P. Seiler, from west of Hudson, was in town last Wednesday.

Mr. Amstead and son, from south of Hudson, were in town Saturday.

Noah Mortorff and Sam Freed went to Ft. Wayne on business Tuesday last.

R. T Duncan spent Sunday at Pleasant Lake. His wife is there visiting in the home of her father, P. Freed.

GAS ADDITION.

Mrs. George F. Reed is convalescent.

Mrs. Charley Bolton is visiting her parents at Avilla.

Miss Jennie Stutz visited friends in Ft. Wayne Saturday.

James Lewis and wife are visiting at Chicago Junction, O.

George Nellis spent Christmas with friends at Ypsilanti, Mich.

George Allen, of Ft. Wayne, visited friends in this neighborhood Sunday.

Mrs. J. Richards is visiting in the country with her mother, Mrs. Metcalf.

Mrs. George Nellis has returned from visiting with Mr. Nellis' parents in Canada.

Mrs. White and daughter, of North Manchester, are visiting with Mrs. Ike Jones, another daughter of the former.

Some of the walks between here and Cedar street are becoming dangerous. A few hours' work replacing broken and rotten boards would remedy this and might prevent a bill for damages. It would not be amiss if the railings along the high walk were repaired. They are torn down in several places, making it dangerous for those obliged to use the walk on dark or stormy nights.

Mrs Goodman and son went to Fort Wayne to spend Christmas with friends.

Columbus Kinnell and daughter, from Montgomery, Mich., are the guests of Rev. H. A. Croy.

The reporter attended the entertainment at the Church of God Christmas morning. It was very nice, some splendid declamations and songs being rendered by the little ones, and an address by H. A. Croy.

Obituary.

Sarah Grogg, wife of Jacob Grogg, deceased, was born in Stark county, Ohio, February 28, 1816, and died in Auburn, December 23, 1893. They were married in 1837, at Canton, O., and to them five children were born, two of whom survive them. They came to this county in 1852, and lived on the farm three miles from Auburn, till 1869 when they moved to town, where they resided till their death. She united with the Lutheran Church in early life, and has been a faithful member since, though poor in health for the last two years, prevented her from regular attendance on divine worship. She leaves a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her loss. The services, conducted by Rev. J. D. Brosy, were at the Lutheran church, Dec. 27, and interment in Evergreen cemetery.

Indiana Highway Association.

The annual meeting of the Indiana Highway Improvement Association will be held in the room of the House of Representatives at Indianapolis, January 4 and 5, 1894. All who are interested, as all should be, in the improvement of roads, should make it a point to attend. A trip to the city at that particular time will be of more than ordinary value as the State Board of Agriculture meets there January 2; the Congress of Industrial Associations on the same day. Also on the same day, the State Wool Growers Association; the State Civil Engineers and Surveyors; the State Short Horn Breeders; on January 4, the State Swine Breeders Association; January 5, the State Bee Keepers Association; January 4, the State Farmers' Reading Circle; January 3, State Tile, Brick and Drainage Association. Most of these meetings last two days, so that a person attending one meeting could meet a part of the time with some other association in which he was interested.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to give our sincere thanks to our friends and neighbors for their kindness during the sickness and death of our beloved daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. August Bohlen.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

A Sad Death.

Can you describe anything worse than a young man dying by inches with consumption; cut off in the bloom of youth when bright prospects of happiness and prosperity are before him, a very sad death indeed. Is it not a fact that most cases of this kind are brought on by a cough, only slight at first, then more violent, followed by night sweats and a general breaking down of the entire system. These are cases in which people are to blame. Why not check this slight cough. Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup is guaranteed to cure. It will prevent consumption. Use it before it is too late. By druggists. Price .25, .50 and $1.

Prof. Totten—The world is coming to an end.
Keeper—Which end?

It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
Dr. G. C. Osgood, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
Dr. J. F. Kincheloe, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. Archer, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
United Hospital and Dispensary, Boston, Mass.
